1. What is FaNBI?

The FaNBI project (Family Names in Britain and Ireland), based at the Bristol Centre for Linguistics at the University of the West of England in Bristol, is a major research project funded by the Arts and Humanities Research Council of Great Britain. The aim has been (and continues to be, for the research is ongoing) to research the origins of family names throughout Britain and Ireland, building on foundations laid by previous scholars but using new methods, new principles, and new resources. These previous scholars include in particular P. H. Reaney and R. M. Wilson, whose Dictionary of English Surnames was made available to the FaNBI project in digitized form by agreement with the publishers, Routledge and Oxford University Press. Other long-standing standard works regularly consulted included Black's Surnames of Scotland, MacLysaght's Surnames of Ireland, Woulfe's Irish Names and Surnames, Welsh Surnames by T. J. and Prys Morgan, and Kneen's Personal Names of the Isle of Man. The present work contains explanations of and evidence for the origins, history, and geographical distribution of over 46,000 family names that are found in Britain and Ireland, many of them never explained before.

1.1 Selection of entries

Family names in modern Britain and Ireland come from all over the world. Reaney, writing in the 1950s, felt able to ignore recent immigrant names and even most Jewish and Irish names in Britain. By contrast, one of FaNBI's policies has been to set impartial frequency thresholds for selection of entries. This dictionary contains an entry for all—or almost all—family names that have more than 100 bearers in the 2011 UK census. The only exceptions are a few immigrant names that came in after 2000.

Of course, the focus of the dictionary is rightly and necessarily on long-established family names in Britain, some of which are very frequent and widely distributed, while others have only a few present-day bearers. Using data supplied by Professor Richard Webber of King's College, London, we were able to compare the frequency and distribution of each family name in 2011 with those in the 1881 census. A distinction was made between established names, which are well evidenced in the 1881 census, and recent immigrant names, which were not present in 1881 (or present only in very small numbers). Many recent immigrant names arrived after the Second World War and are now very frequent. They cannot be ignored.

In a few cases, for lack of sufficient diagnostic information, it has proved impossible to establish or even suggest an etymology for a name (established or recent). In such cases, if it passes the frequency criterion, the name is given a dictionary entry, a selection of evidence is presented, and the etymology is recorded as 'unexplained'. In other cases, an explanation is prefaced by 'perhaps' or 'possibly' when, after a careful weighing of the available evidence, it has proved impossible to reach a certain or even a probable conclusion. Thus, FaNBI's inclusion policy is impartial and multicultural. This has only been possible because, for explanations, we were able to draw on the contributions of the consultants listed on page v. Having said that, it must be reiterated that the focus of most entries is on the medieval origins and subsequent development of established names in Britain and Ireland. One of the many research aims has been to correct errors in previous publications in the light of newly available evidence. FaNBI takes account of the relationship between family names and localities, in a way that was prefigured by H. B. Guppy's Homes of Family Names in Great Britain, published as long ago as 1890. Guppy took his data from Kelly's directories and of course did not have a computer; nevertheless, he was able to demonstrate the statistical tendency of family names to be associated with particular localities—a tendency that was, regrettably, sometimes overlooked by subsequent scholars.

Living in the days before there were computers, P. H. Reaney achieved an impressive collection of evidence for early bearers from documents in what was then the Public Record Office (now The National Archives). Using Reaney's collection as a foundation, researchers for FaNBI undertook analysis of large electronic data files, using techniques for the statistical analysis of 'big data' that were first developed in corpus-driven lexicography in the 1980s and 1990s. These large electronic data files included information extracted from sources such as parish registers and Nonconformist circuit records (published in the International Genealogical Index), tax records such as Carolyn Fenwick's painstakingly transcribed and digitized 14th-century Poll Tax Returns, and the Tudor Fiants in Ireland. A full list of the sources consulted is given on pages lxxv–cxvii.

1.2 Order of contents for entries

The information for each entry is presented in the following sequence: spelling of the name (main entry or variant); frequencies; main location(s) with which the name is most associated; one or more explanations; further information (if any); selected early bearers; references.

1.2.1 MAIN ENTRIES AND VARIANTS

Of the 46,000 or more entries, over half are variant spellings. Each entry in the dictionary is either a main entry or a variant cross-referenced to a main entry. For some names, for example Caldicott<sup>1</sup>, more than twenty different spellings are still current, not to mention obsolete and rare historical variants. FaNBI's policy is to choose one of these forms as the main point of explanation and to generate cross-reference entries to it from all the variants that are still current. In addition, many obsolete spellings can be found among the lists of early bearers. Generally, the spelling chosen as the main entry is the most frequent modern form, although in some cases preference has been given to an etymologically more transparent form, especially where this facilitates understanding of the variants and their development. In addition to receiving a cross-reference entry in the dictionary, each modern variant is listed at the main entry. Where there are several variants, they are arranged in groups; the order of variants (or groups of variants) is often suggestive of the processes that have affected development and differentiation of the various spellings. Thus, the lists of variants can tell an etymological story (or several such stories).

1.2.2 FREQUENCIES

Every entry gives the frequency of that spelling of the name in the censuses of Great Britain in 1881 and 2011. For Ireland, equivalent frequency data is also given, insofar as it was available at the time of compilation.

1.2.3 MAIN LOCATIONS

The geographical distribution of a family name in the late 19th century provides an essential starting point for tracing its origin. If the name was current in 1881, the FaNBI entry gives its main location in Britain at that date, based on Archer's British 19th Century Surname Atlas, and (where relevant) in Ireland in 1847–64, based on the frequency of locations in Griffith's Valuation. The intention is not to give a full description of where the name occurred at those dates but only to indicate in which counties or regions the name was most common. For a list of counties and the abbreviations used for them in this dictionary, see page cxix. Regional terms include East Anglia (Norfolk, Suffolk, and sometimes Cambridgeshire and Essex as well), London (i.e. the London area, which includes those parts of Middlesex, Essex, Kent, and Surrey that later became Greater London), and Glasgow (the region embracing north Lanarkshire, north Ayrshire, Renfrewshire, and part of Dunbartonshire). The summary of locations is only a rough guide, especially so for the many names that have a complicated pattern of primary distribution.

1.2.4 EXPLANATIONS

Every explanation is introduced by an indication of the social group (by language, culture, or religious affiliation) within which the name apparently originated or mainly developed (e.g. Norman, English, Irish, Huguenot, Jewish, Muslim, etc.). This is followed by a categorization of the name by type (see section 3.3 below). The main exception is Irish Gaelic family names which, since they are almost always derived from personal names, are to be understood as relationship names without the need to say so. In the etymological part of the explanations every effort is made to give a clear sense of what the name may originally have meant, together with an etymological form in the language in which the name was coined. Where an etymological form is preceded by an asterisk (*), it indicates that the form given is not on record but has been reconstructed from what is known about the language and its patterns of word and name formation. Such reconstructions are based on comparisons with existing and recorded historical forms, in accordance with the principle that language change normally follows regular patterns. Many family names have more than one origin. In FaNBI such names are explained in two or more numbered categories, each with its own explanation.

Certainty in explanations is not always possible. In some cases, FaNBI's explanations are to be seen as probable or reasonably possible, rather than certain. This is because the source data is highly volatile. Etymologies have to be based on the earliest known spellings of a name, but early name-forms are often formally ambiguous and rarely occur in contexts that define their meaning. Linking early name spellings, for which a convincing etymology can be suggested, to modern family-name spellings is usually a matter of informed guesswork, based where possible on a coherent historical sequence of linguistic evidence and a plausible geographical relationship between early and later recorded names. Our current knowledge of family history and of the early vocabulary and other circumstances that lie behind modern family names has many gaps, some of which may be gradually filled by further research, although this is dependent on the discovery of records that can supply the missing information, and many crucial records have survived only in fragments or not at all.

1.2.5 FURTHER INFORMATION

Occasionally a FaNBI entry includes some additional information, for example about the history of the name or about a particular family that bears it, or the reason for doubting an explanation that appeared in earlier dictionaries.

1.2.6 EARLY BEARERS

Justification for each etymology and its relation to the modern family name-form is provided by a list of early bearers, with dates, sources, and geographical locations (when known), broadly in chronological sequence. For a list of sources and their abbreviations see page lxxv. Where the evidence of early bearers belongs equally plausibly with two or more explanations, all the selected early bearers are grouped together in a single category and small roman numerals are used for the different explanations. Conversely, if there is only a single explanation for the origin of a name that is widespread, it has sometimes seemed desirable to separate the early bearers according to geographical criteria, typically defined by the different countries or territories where the name is recorded (for example, Scotland, England, Ireland, Isle of Man) and sometimes by English regions (for example, SW England, E Anglia, W Midlands). Selection of early bearers in the medieval period is sometimes influenced by linguistic considerations, to support the etymological case, even if the geographical location is not relevant to the modern family name, but post-medieval bearers have been chosen whenever possible to reflect the modern history and geographical distribution of the name.

1.2.7 REFERENCES

Some entries conclude with references to sources of information (published or unpublished) that are more specific than the general List of Sources on pages lxxv–cxvii. Such references typically provide information about only one name or about the association between a particular family name and a county or location.

1.3 Philology and genealogy

FaNBI, then, is an etymological dictionary of family names, bringing together explanations of origins with carefully selected evidence of early bearers and other historical and linguistic facts, setting all this in the context of the geographical and historical distribution of each family name. It is primarily a philological work, not a genealogical index or a guide to family histories. However, since the history of every family name is embedded within the histories of the families that bore it, there is everything to be gained from combining philological and genealogical information in the search for a name's origin. Two central problems for the family-name historian are that families have moved about over time and that the pronunciation and spelling of their names have often been highly variable. An understanding of historical linguistic variation is essential for tracing the history of a family name back to its origins, for which a sequence of dated, appropriately located name-forms is vital. Similarly, information about family history, especially a family's movements within and beyond its original neighbourhood, can be crucial in establishing the true origin of many family names.

Unfortunately the histories of most families have yet to be researched in any depth, but a number of entries in FaNBI have benefited from information supplied by genealogists and by local and family-name historians, in particular members of the Guild of One-Name Studies and Dr George Redmonds, who kindly made his Dictionary of Yorkshire Surnames available to the editors of FaNBI prior to its publication in 2015. John and Sheila Rowlands' Surnames of Wales and Edgar Tooth's Distinctive Surnames of North Staffordshire (2000, 2002, 2004, and 2010) have also proved invaluable, as has the English Surnames Series, whose volumes have surveyed surname development in East Anglia, the West Riding of Yorkshire, Oxfordshire, Lancashire, Sussex, Devon, Leicestershire, and Rutland. Other useful information about the geographical and linguistic history of individual names has been extracted not only from printed sources but also from unpublished sources. These include medieval and post-medieval Lay Subsidy Rolls, Court Rolls, editions of wills (all periods), and Hearth Tax Returns, and now also several online sources such as the University of Iowa's Calendar of Patent Rolls, the National Archives' Discovery website, and British History Online. Extensive use has been made of the vast International Genealogical Index (IGI), mostly in its pre-2012 online format, from which 193 million British and Irish entries were kindly made available in electronic form by FamilySearch International. From this a carefully vetted selection of early bearers was made, following cross-checking of samples against information from parish registers. Since 2012 the IGI has been split into two collections, of which the Community Indexed IGI, based on primary records, has supplied FaNBI with further data.

A central aim of the researchers has therefore been to create a reference work that will be of value to genealogists as well as to linguistic and social historians and members of the public in general. For many family names, genealogical studies, working backwards from the present day, run into the sand when they get back to the 17th or (at best) 16th century. Even the most fortunate genealogies struggle to establish factual information earlier than 1536, the date of the earliest parish registers. In addition to explaining linguistic and historical facts, in entry after entry FaNBI provides a link between the earliest available genealogical records for a name and a probable origin, which in most cases took place several centuries earlier.

2. What is a family name?

In modern English the terms family name and surname are used interchangeably. However, the two terms have quite different origins. The term surname originally denoted an additional name—that is, one used in addition to an individual’s given name, with no implication that it was hereditary. Across medieval Europe a surname was at first often no more than a byname, an ad-hoc sobriquet that was descriptively true of the individual to whom it was given. The same person might be known by several such bynames, the main function of which was to differentiate between two or more individuals who bore the same given name, by referring to their parentage, the place where they lived or came from, their occupation or status, or something notable about their appearance, behaviour, or activities. These various types of byname or surname and their subsequent development into hereditary family names are more fully discussed in section 3 below. The term family name is a more modern coinage. It draws attention to the fact that the origins of modern hereditary surnames lie as much in the history of the families that bore them as in the history of the languages in which they were coined and developed.

Throughout the English-speaking world, most of Europe, and much of the rest of the world, human beings are now usually known and identified by a pair of names: a personal name or given name, which is bestowed on the individual at birth, and a family name, which is normally inherited from the father (although in some cases nowadays the mother’s family name may be chosen). These two names together constitute the binomial system of naming. Of course, an individual may have more than one given name, while double- and even triple-barrelled family names are not unknown. However, the basic principle of the binomial naming system is not affected by the number of items in each category.

This system contrasts with the patronymic system and the Arabic system. In the patronymic system an individual is known by a given name plus a reference to the person’s father, and sometimes the father’s father and so on, generation by generation, an ancestor name-chain which may be shared vertically and laterally with others of the group, with a new name tacked on by each new generation. In early medieval times some version of the patronymic system was the norm throughout much of Europe, including Britain and Ireland, and it is still current in Iceland, where Anna Magnúsdóttir (‘Anna daughter of Magnus’) would be a literal description of her patronymic relationship, not an ancestral label. In Wales, the patronymic system survived into the 19th century, when it became more usual for a patronymic such as Jones or Bevan to become a fixed hereditary name. In Ireland, however, naming was already developing in the 10th century into a system in which inheritable family names were created by reducing ancestor name-chains to the name of one particular ancestor. In England and Scotland it gave way during the late medieval period to the system of binomial surnaming that is now normal in most of the Western world, in which patronymics such as Williamson constitute only one of several types of hereditary family name.

The Arabic (and Muslim) naming system is a complex one, in which a given name is followed by a sequence of additional names, usually starting with a patronymic, followed by other names drawn from the person’s parentage, lineage, place of origin, or an attribute. Details are given in section 15 below. Traditionally there is no family name in the European sense, but some Muslim countries, for example Turkey and Egypt, now require one by law. In the English-speaking world Arabic or Muslim names are sometimes arbitrarily adapted to the binomial system, sometimes with bizarre effects, as when the Urdu feminine honorific Begum (approximately equivalent to English Mrs) is treated as if it were an inheritable family name.

2.1 Monogenetic and polygenetic family names

It is a fascinating question whether a family name derives from several eponymous ancestors or from a single one. The terms polygenetic and monogenetic are used to distinguish the two types, but this should not be taken to mean that all members of the same family are necessarily genetically related, which DNA research has shown to be incorrect. With regard to family-name history, therefore, polygenetic names are those with multiple family origins, and monogenetic names are those with single family origins, whether or not any or all of the modern bearers of the names are genetically descended from a particular eponymous ancestor.

It has long been thought that most British family names are polygenetic. It is obviously true of Smith, which is the most widespread and numerous British family name. There were over 400,000 bearers in the 1881 census, most of whom will have descended directly from one or other of the several thousand unrelated medieval heads-of-family surnamed Smith that are recorded right across late medieval Britain. The same is undoubtedly true of other family names whose modern bearers run into the many thousands and for which there are large numbers of medieval forebears on record. Brown (ranked fourth in frequency in the 1881 census) had nearly 200,000, Wilson and Evans (ranked seventh and eighth) had over 130,000 each, and Hall (ranked nineteenth) had nearly 80,000.

Surprisingly, however, there are comparatively few family names with such large numbers of bearers. In the online transcripts of the 1881 census data, there are over 250,000 different family names, including, in many cases, different spellings of what was once the same name. Yet very common family names form only a tiny percentage of the total number. In fact, fewer than 500 family names each had more than 10,000 bearers. Fewer than 1,000 family names had more than 5,000 bearers, and only around 20,000 had more than 100 bearers each. This means that more than 200,000 family names had fewer than 100 bearers, belonging to an even smaller number of families. At first sight, these are startling figures and, although some names with very small numbers of bearers are known to be ghost names produced by mistaken transcriptions, most family names recorded with at least ten bearers in 1881 are genuine. One of the reasons why low-frequency names predominate is that they are often variant pronunciations or spellings of other names, but even when the figures for all the variants are added together, the gross numbers of bearers usually remain quite low. In Surnames, DNA, and Family History, Redmonds, King, and Hey observe that ‘paradoxically it was, and still is, very common to possess an uncommon surname’, and this itself points to the possibility that a substantial proportion of surviving family names in Britain derive not from the identical names of several progenitors but from the name of a single individual. If so, these names will be monogenetic.

The likelihood of a monogenetic origin for many family names is emphasized by the way in which so many of them in the 1881 census, as mapped by Steve Archer, can be seen clustering in the district, county, or region where the name is known to have originated. For example, Meatyard (with 210 bearers in 1881) clustered in and around Shaftesbury in Dorset in 1881, and Meacher (205 bearers) around Southampton in Hampshire. These were almost certainly variant pronunciations of the same name, which can be traced back through the centuries in the records of Dorset, Hampshire, Wiltshire, and Berkshire to a Richard Metiarewe (apparently a compound of Middle English meten ‘to repay’ + yarewe ‘promptly’), who in 1327 was assessed for taxation in Stour Provost (Dorset). It is a remarkable coincidence that an Anne Metyard is recorded by IGI in Stour Provost as late as 1732. It is both the rarity and the locational uniqueness of the medieval name (Middle English Metiarewe has not been noted anywhere else than in Stour Provost) that gives one the confidence that this name goes back to a single individual.

However, in cases where the Middle English name was more common than that or where more than one Middle English etymon lies behind the modern name, the degree of frequency of the modern name combined with a marked geographical clustering is not always a safe guide to either a polygenetic or monogenetic origin. Even common polygenetic family names can cluster in a geographically specific pattern. This is especially true of the many Welsh family names that were derived from common Welsh and English personal names. The vast majority of families named Jones (the second most common British family name) occurred in Wales and the neighbouring English counties in 1881, even though it was also widespread in smaller numbers right across England and southern Scotland. Sometimes polygenetic names derive from a dialectally restricted word. Tucker, which comes from the south-western dialect term for a fuller of cloth, has well over 16,000 bearers in the 1881 census. Because of family migration, it was widespread in low numbers in most British counties in 1881 and appeared in high numbers in the London area. It was most heavily concentrated in its homeland of south-west England (especially Devon), where families with this name are descended from any of the many unrelated men called To(u)kere who are found in the medieval records of Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, Dorset, Wiltshire, and Hampshire.

On the other hand, the numerous Lancashire and West Riding family name Butterworth is almost certainly monogenetic, i.e. it has a single family origin. It had over 10,000 bearers in 1881, most of them in Rochdale parish, where the township of Butterworth is situated. It is also fairly common in adjacent parishes in east Lancashire and the West Riding. Whether all of these descended from the earliest known Lancashire bearer, Roger de Butterword, recorded in the 13th-century Whalley Abbey Coucher Book, cannot be proved with absolute certainty. Probably, it will be possible to get a better idea of the number of present-day bearers of this name who are genealogically related as the volume of DNA evidence increases.

In the same township is a hamlet called Clegg. Although the family name Clegg, with over 10,000 bearers in 1881, has alternative origins that probably account for its presence in small numbers in Scotland and in southern England, over 8,000 of them were located in the same restricted area as Butterworth, centred on Rochdale. According to McKinley’s Surnames of Lancashire a Hugh de Clegg was recorded as a landowner there in the early 13th century, and it may be that most of the modern families with this name in Lancashire and the West Riding descend from this man, although genealogical evidence to prove this is lacking. Highly prolific monogenetic names such as Butterworth and Clegg are a particular feature of that area of north-west England. The reason for this is not known.

A major problem in identifying monogenetic names arises from the fact that many family names of different etymologies have come to be pronounced or spelled like each other, increasingly so between 1450 and the present day. Names in the 1881 census that have more than one distributional epicentre may sometimes be the same name originating in different families in separate places. However, most such cases are due to early migration, while others are names of different etymologies that, through accidents of linguistic change, have become indistinguishable from each other; these are known as homonyms. Even if the main form of a name remains distinctive, its variants can be homonymous with other names or their variants. When the distributions of homonymous names overlap, it can be challenging to disentangle the different threads (the early bearers) that link particular examples of the modern name to their correct family and etymological origin. For example, in the early-bearer data for the Staffordshire and Leicestershire name Sherrard and its many variants (Sherrat(t), Sherrit(t), Shar(r)at(t), and so on) it is often impossible to distinguish between examples that are derived from the Middle English nickname Shirard (probably denoting someone with fair hair) and examples that are variant pronunciations of three other names: Sherwood (from Sherwood Forest or some other locality named in Old English as scīr wudu ‘bright wood’), Skerritt (a nickname from Middle English skirwhit(e) ‘skirret, water parsnip’), and Scarratt (a Staffordshire name of uncertain etymology), all of which coincide in one spelling or another with variant spellings of Sherrard in the same or nearby parishes. Sherwood itself may also sometimes be a hypercorrect pronunciation of Sherrard. Ambiguities like these can only be resolved, if at all, through more detailed documentary research at a local level, aided by further increases in the volume of DNA data from modern family-name bearers. The fact that Sherrard and its dozen or more spelling variants in the Staffordshire and Leicestershire area have low numbers of bearers in 1881, mostly below 100, is a warning that low frequency, combined with geographical clustering, is not always a sign of a single family origin. Indeed, the complexity of much family-name history and the limitations of current genealogical and etymological knowledge make it necessary that for the vast majority of family names the role of FaNBI is simply to record a relevant sample of the available evidence and to set out the etymological options, rather than to attempt to provide individual family histories.

2.2 Family names and genetics

Since the turn of the millennium, a number of studies have been conducted which evaluate the usefulness of DNA evidence in the study of family-name origins and genealogy, notably Sykes and Irven (2000), Jobling (2001), Bowden and others (2008), and King and Jobling (2009). Redmonds, King, and Hey (2011: 156) observe that ‘just as a father passes on his surname to all his children, so he passes on his Y chromosome type to all his male children,’ and they then pass the same Y chromosome type to their male children, and so on. By comparing the Y-chromosomal DNA of different people with the same family name (including philologically proven variants of it), it is possible to show that a particular family name is monogenetic. But it should be clear that whilst the technique is potentially valuable in establishing kinship, or indeed in disproving it, its evidential value in other onomastic respects is diminished by the accidents of social convention and reproduction.

It is legally permissible for a person over 16 to change his or her family name in any way that the bearer chooses, provided only that no criminal purpose is intended. No doubt this has often been done without the fig leaf of the deed poll that may be obtained to give such changes legal force. Specific examples of family-name discontinuity may be mentioned, none of them in any way unique. It has always been possible for a man to adopt the family name of his wife instead of his own, often with status or fortune in mind. In the early 19th century, Davies Giddy, MP for Cornwall before the 1832 Reform Act, adopted his wife’s family name, Gilbert, in order to acquire land in Sussex, the inheritance of which had been made conditional on the perpetuation of the Gilbert family name. There are many historical examples of aristocrats without male bodily heirs settling their titles and fortunes on a younger relative on condition of the preservation of the accompanying family name; another case is that of William Russell being made heir of Ralph Gorges in 1331 on such a condition. This was a practice that became increasingly common among aristocratic and gentry families in the 14th century (Wells-Furby, 2015). One reason why ‘marrying beneath oneself’ was frowned on was that, in the case of a man, it was viewed as debasing the currency of a name shared with other family members. A father has not always passed on his family name to his illegitimate children—a woman may be unwilling to disclose the father’s name. In Coventry in the 1460s, Margaret Glover declined to reveal the name of her first baby’s father; later, she failed to identify her second child’s father on the grounds that ‘so many men had known her’ (Kettle, 1995: 27–8). Presumably the children were known as Glover. The topographer William Worcestre (1415–c.1480/85), also known as William Botoner, was the son of William Worcestre senior and Elizabeth Botoner, but he referred to himself as W. Botoner dictus Worcetre [sic]. There is no suggestion that William was illegitimate; his father is described as his [William junior’s] maternal grandmother’s son-in-law in 1402, so was evidently married to Elizabeth by then, thirteen years before William junior’s birth. So the topographer chose to be called by his maternal family name, even if posterity has decided otherwise. The Romans had a relevant saying, based on the obstetrics of the day: Mater certa, pater semper incertus, ‘the mother can be known for certain, the father is always open to doubt’. The incidents of Gilbert, Gorges, Glover, and Botoner alias Worcester, widely separated in time, illustrate that family names cannot always be taken as reliable proxies for chromosomes.

While it is possible to be surer about paternity these days thanks to genetic advances, the potential for doubt about equating the family name with the Y chromosome is still there. However, successes must be acknowledged; one of the best-known works that shows the value of DNA evidence in family-name research is Sykes and Irven (2000), which found that the English family name Sykes is most probably monogenetic, even though previous work had predicted it to be polygenetic. Using similar techniques, Y-chromosome and family-name comparison could be used to prove or disprove a proposed connection between two family names of different form which are suspected of having a common linguistic origin, and therefore could complement the study of family-name etymologies.

2.3 Statistics of population and family names

Family names are much less stable than place-names. Over time, a family name may be borne by hundreds of thousands or even millions of individuals. These individuals move around, have offspring, change their names, and die. Named places do none of these things—at any rate, not on a significant scale. A family name may change its form many times in the course of its history. For these and other reasons, the student of family names would be well advised to at least be aware of the statistics of population and to be wary of ‘obvious’ assumptions and the natural human craving for grandeur and for certainty. Some questions that typically arise with regard to the study of family names include the following:

- What is the likelihood that a person living today is a descendant of someone with the same or a similar name who lived in the 11th or 14th century?
- How many family names are there in Britain?
- How many family names are there with only one bearer?
- What is the association between any one family name and a particular town, county, or other locality?
- If such a relationship between a family name and a locality can be shown to exist—for example, by using the 1881 census data in Archer’s British Surname Atlas—how stable is it, over time?
- Does such a relationship mean that the locality is necessarily the one where the family name originated?
- Are rare names likely to be genuine, or are they more likely to be transcription errors?
- How can we establish whether any particular family name is a variant of some other name?
- If I meet someone with the same family name as me, how likely is it that we are related, and how closely?
- Many family names found in medieval records are not found today. How plausible is it that they have simply died out?

The standard work on the changing population of England is Wrigley and Schofield (1989). This sets an important part of the context within which research into family names can be undertaken.

Computational analysis of the 1881 census shows some facts that may at first sight seem surprising. In the first place, that census contains over 400,000 family names—far more than anyone might have predicted. But then nearly 200,000 of these (i.e. almost half) occur only once. It remains to be established how many of these ‘singletons’ are due to transcription errors and other mistakes, and how many are genuine family names. A lot more of the infrequent names may be genuine than is commonly assumed. How many of these rare names recur in other census data? No one has yet undertaken such a study. More attention needs to be paid in future to the size and shape of the family-name population in Britain. A useful website for people interested in such matters is Surname Studies at <http://surnamestudies.org.uk/statistics/local.htm>.

Two other sources will help to set the context, especially if such a study is to be related to the study of DNA inheritance and genetics. The first explains the characteristic shape of a population, whether this be the population of a particular county or a whole country. The second makes predictions about the likely fate of a family name over time. These sources are Zipf (1932, 1949), and Sturges and Haggett (1987).

It is obvious that a few names such as Smith, Brown, and Williams are very common. It is perhaps less obvious that many names are very rare indeed, and many of these are long-established family names, not those of isolated recent immigrants. It is all too easy to dismiss rare traditional family names as errors or oddities, produced in some cases by errors of transcription or by deliberate alteration by their bearers. But in fact there are well-known statistical tendencies that govern both the distribution of family names within a population and their gradual decline. These tendencies will help us to understand the genuine rarity of certain traditional names and the phenomenon of surname death.

Zipf’s law explains the characteristic shape of a population. Zipf’s primary interest was in word frequency. He observed that, in any large, naturally occurring population of entities (e.g. words in a collection of texts), a very small number of items are very frequent, while at the other end of the scale there are a very large number of items that are very infrequent, in many cases with only one occurrence of each. Moreover, Zipf hypothesized that these phenomena are governed by a principle of collective human behaviour, which he called ‘the principle of least effort’. There are two aspects to this principle. On the one hand there is a tendency, governed by ‘forces of unification’ for the most frequent words or names to become more and more common. On the other hand there is a tendency governed by ‘forces of differentiation’ for rare items to become rare and for some of them to die out. Furthermore, Zipf predicted that, if these items (words or names in a naturally occurring population) are arranged in frequency order, there will be a harmonic progression such that an item at rank 2 will occur with a frequency of one half of the item at rank 1; an item at rank 3 will occur with a frequency of one third of the item at rank 1, and so on down the rank scale. At the bottom of the rank scale, the model predicts a large number of items with only one or two occurrences. Do the facts concerning the distribution of family names in Britain conform to Zipf’s prediction?

Of course, ‘Zipf’s law’ is an abstract idealization. If one compares it with the reality of family names in the 1881 British census data, there is not a perfect harmonic progression, but something close to the predicted pattern can be observed. If we take the most frequent names in groups of five, we see that the top five have a combined frequency of 1,362,520. The next five have a frequency of 655,594 (48 per cent of the top five). The next five have a frequency of 487,334 (36 per cent of the top five). This progression is encouragingly close to Zipf’s prediction. At the level of individual names, the pattern is less striking among the top six, but a tendency answering to the spirit of the prediction can be seen:

- Smith has a frequency of 421,701 in Archer’s British Surname Atlas
- Jones has a frequency of 338,369 in Archer, about 80% of the frequency of Smith
- Williams has a frequency of 214,437, about 50% of the frequency of Smith
- Brown has a frequency of 196,909, about 45% of the frequency of Smith
- Taylor has a frequency of 191,104, about 45% of the frequency of Smith
- Davies has a frequency of 152,154, about 35% of the frequency of Smith.

The forces of diversification can be illustrated by names such as Axbey, Wheybrew, and Yarbrough, which have arisen as variants of Ashby, Whybrow, and Yarborough.

A similar theme was developed by Sturges and Haggett (1987). Using a mathematical model (rather than observed data), they showed that, while today’s stock of family names may be fairly stable, this was probably not the case in the past. Their model made a prediction that approximately 60 per cent of family names would have died out between 1350 and 1987 (assuming that twenty-three generations elapsed in that period). This is an astonishingly high figure; it remains to be empirically verified. However, at the very least, the model of Sturges and Haggett usefully reminds us that many family names do indeed die out over time.

The phenomenon of surname death also goes some way towards explaining some of the differences between the selection of entries in Reaney’s dictionary and those in the present work. Names that are recorded in Reaney but that can no longer be found include Edicker, Edmay, Feverel, Morehen, Pleader, Portrait, Pritwell, Templecombe, and Trentmars. By the same tendency, the names Avner, Hudlin, Newcastle, Quatermass, and Whittred were formerly more common but by 1881 they each had been reduced to single-figure populations.

Sturges and Haggett also hypothesized that even more family names would have been lost had there been a lower rate of population growth, but the growth in population, along with the earlier rate of extinction of family names, has meant that there are now more people and fewer surnames, so it is relatively rare for a surname to die out today. The rate of surname death seems to be in decline. A complication results from the fact that the figures for some family names have been boosted in recent years by re-immigration, especially from English-speaking regions such as the West Indies.

Andrew Millard (<https://community.dur.ac.uk/a.r.millard/genealogy/EdwardIIIDescent.php>) investigated whether it is possible to estimate the number of present-day English descendants of King Edward III, who lived from 1312 to 1377. Millard concluded that there is an extremely high probability that every single present-day person with English ancestry descends (by one line or another) from Edward III. There are also many millions more such descendants living in Ireland, the USA, former British colonies, and elsewhere. One hundred million living descendants of this king is, according to Millard, a conservative estimate. There is, of course, nothing special about King Edward III as an ancestor, other than the fact that he is known to have married and had offspring, so he was not himself the end of his line. The same question could be asked about any other medieval ancestor, and would reach a similar conclusion. The simple fact is that, if we ask questions like ‘Who were our 14th-century ancestors?’, a simple statistical calculation, making standard assumptions about the number of male marrying offspring in each generation, drives us to the conclusion that, in a stable population after twenty or thirty generations, everyone is related to everyone else.

On the other hand, direct patrilineal ancestry through primogeniture, a focus of traditional genealogical studies, is extremely rare, almost to non-existence. Direct male lines die out sooner or later—in many cases after only a generation or two. It may indeed be the case that each one of us is descended, by some tangled path of heredity, from King Edward III (or for that matter from any other 14th-century grandee, or from William the Conqueror 300 years earlier), but the line of descent is almost never direct. It is further complicated by phenomena such as the birth of children outside marriage and the practice, formerly more common than now, of bringing up another’s child as one’s own—a fact that, quite often, came eventually to be forgotten. Even the Berkeley family—owners and inhabitants of Berkeley Castle in Gloucestershire since the 12th century, who were meticulously documented in all their activities—have not achieved their continuity of possession through direct male primogenitary inheritance.

The basic point here is that the relationship between family names and genealogy is very far from straightforward. An alternative perspective—arguably a truer perspective—will start with a comparative survey of the population as a whole at selected points in time, taking account in particular of changes in both the frequency and the geographical distribution of each family name.

3. Origins and development of family names in England

The primary focus of FaNBI is on established family names in England, Scotland, Ireland, the Isle of Man, and the Channel Islands. Approximately 14,000 main entries have an English or Norman French origin, about 2,000 are Scottish (from either Scots or Scottish Gaelic), about 2,000 are Irish, while just under 300 have a Welsh etymology and about 200 are classified as Cornish. In the main sections that follow, the history and characteristics of each of these sources are discussed, followed by sections discussing the origins of family names from outside Britain and Ireland and other features of the work.

3.1 The beginnings of family names in England

The language in which the oldest family names in England originated was not English but Norman French. After 1066, when William the Conqueror, Duke of Normandy, seized the monarchy in England, many of his retainers were granted lands and honours in England. These Norman barons and their followers were increasingly identified not only by a given name, but also by a surname (whether hereditary or not) taken from a nickname (for example Gernon, from Old French gernon ‘moustache’); from an occupation or high office of state (for example Marshall, from Old French mareschal ‘officer in charge of a noble household’); from an ancestor’s given name (for example Bertram, from the Old French personal name Bertran(t)); or most commonly from a place where the family held lands, either in northern France (for example Percy, from one of several places so named in Normandy) or in England (for example Clare, from the family’s estate at Clare in Suffolk). In the 12th century this practice of surnaming gradually spread, with modifications, throughout the upper levels of feudal tenantry, and also to merchants and traders in the larger towns. By the end of the 13th century, in most of England it had become normal practice in most rural communities at all social levels, though not so regularly in northern counties until the middle of the 14th century. These surnames were at first frequently no more than bynames, even among Normans. Only gradually did they come to be stable, being passed down from one generation to the next. Before describing the development of hereditary family names, it will be useful to say something about the language and culture of early English surnames and then to give a fuller account of the different types or categories that are mentioned in the dictionary entries.

3.2 Linguistic and cultural origins of English names

Early English surnames are mostly derived from (Anglo-)Norman French and Middle English words and names (place-names and personal names). Some of the earliest hereditary names were coined in exclusively Anglo-Norman social contexts, reflecting the northern French language and culture of the new masters of England following the Norman Conquest. Old French words like maloret ‘unlucky’ or phrases like bote torte ‘twisted boot’, the sources of modern Mallory and Bultitude, never entered Middle English vocabulary, and some Norman personal names like Anketin may never have been used beyond the 12th-century Anglo-Norman families that adopted it as their surname (see Antin). However, large numbers of French personal names and words were adopted into English usage, so that by the time of the main period of English surname coinage (13th to 14th centuries) native English people were frequently naming each other with Old French personal names, as in Richard and Isabel, and with words of French origin, as in Spicer, Chamberlain, Mantelle, and Hardy.

At the same time, surnames were being created from the stock of native English personal names and words (for example, Edgar, Baker, Marsh, and Long). These included borrowings into late Old English from the Old Scandinavian languages used by Viking settlers in northern and eastern England, hence surnames such as Tolley (from the personal name Tóli), Kirk ('church'), and Grave ('steward').

It is useful to be aware that Norman French had two dialects. In northern Normandy the dialect was the conservative Old French of Picardy and is sometimes referred to as Normanno-Picard in dictionary entries. In southern Normandy it was that of the more 'advanced' Old French of the region around Paris, referred to as Parisian or Central French, in which for example initial /k/, when followed by /a/, was altered to /tʃ/, and initial /w/ was altered to /gw/, later simplified to /g/. The currency of both pronunciations in the Norman speech of post-Conquest England led to the development in English of word doublets like cattle and chattel, and warden and guardian (although with some semantic differentiation), and to the development of surname doublets like Campion and Champion, and Willman and Gillman.

Middle English had many dialects, some of whose differences survive in modern family names. Dialect vocabulary is reflected, for example, in Lister and Kirk in northern England but Dyer and Church in southern England, and Tucker in south-west England but Fuller in south-east England. Dialect pronunciation has produced Fenn in East Anglia and other parts of south-east England, but Venn in south-west England; Hull in the West Midlands but Hill in north and east England and Hell in south-east England and East Anglia; R(h)odes in the West Riding of Yorkshire and in most of Lancashire but Royds in south-east Lancashire.

3.3 The typology of English family names

English family names fall into one or more of several types. These are useful (but sometimes rough and ready) ways of grouping names that share a similar linguistic form or have a broadly similar semantic content. Not all names fit neatly into a single category; e.g. atte Mill 'at the mill' is locative in linguistic form but since in practice it is synonymous with 'mill worker' it is both locative and occupational in its meaning.

3.3.1 LOCATIVE NAMES

3.3.1.1 Toponymic names

Locative names are by far the most numerous type of family name, of which toponymics (family names based on place-names) are the largest subgroup. At the highest levels of medieval society they usually identified the principal estate held by the name bearer, whether in Normandy (up until 1204, when King John was forced to cede Normandy to France) or in England. For example, the Glanville family took its name from Glanville in Calvados, and the Norman family known as de Tosny (from its estate in Tosny in Eure) was alternatively known as de Stafford, from the county town of Staffordshire, where the family was a major landowner in the 12th century. This family, however, left no male heirs, and the modern families called Stafford are unlikely to be of Norman origin. Landowners often acquired additional properties through marriage, through inheritance, as a reward for services to their overlords, or through purchase, with the result that their toponymic surnames became associated with entirely different places from where they originated. In the 13th and 14th centuries the powerful noble Lincolnshire family named Tattersall (from a place of this name in Lincolnshire) had manors and other properties in the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire, and probably also in Leicestershire, the West Riding, and Lancashire, since this name also appears in those counties in the late 14th-century Poll Tax Returns. In the 1881 Census it is mainly found in Lancashire and the West Riding, with only a tiny representation in Lincolnshire and other counties.

The geographical mobility of medieval families slightly lower down the social scale can similarly be explained by marriage, inheritance, patronal gift, and purchase, but also by commerce. Merchants who set up business in various towns were commonly known by a toponymic derived from one or more of the towns in England or in other countries in which they had property. Major foreign commercial centres such as Bruges in Flanders, Cologne in Germany, and Amiens in Picardy are probably sources of at least some of our modern families named Bridges, Cullen, and Amias. An early 14th-century mayor of Nottingham, a wealthy merchant and shipowner, was sometimes named as William de Mekesburgh (from the market town of Mexborough in the West Riding, about forty miles from Nottingham) and more often as William de Amyas (from Amiens in Picardy, the centre of the woad trade). His son John's will (executed before 1324) listed possessions including three-and-a-half barrels of woad (for dyeing cloth), two woad vats, five wool skins, and a large chest full of cloth. By 1327 William de Amyas had acquired the manor of Watnall Chaworth (six miles from Nottingham), where he could escape the town's cramped, crowded streets and the noxious chemicals and smells that went with the town's cloth-making and dyeing industries, not to mention tanning, animal slaughtering, and other noisome occupations. This is typical of the way in which toponymic family names spread from place to place, and it explains why so many of the names of major English towns, like Leicester, Winchester, and York, appear as family names in villages and in other towns, often far from where they originated.

Most toponymic family names, however, originated from the thousands of ordinary villages and hamlets from which men of free birth migrated to the nearest town to get a job in some trade or other. Others were derived from villages or hamlets where they were given or bought for themselves a new or additional home. Distances between the new homestead and the old were mostly within ten to twenty miles. Men of unfree birth (villeins or bondmen) rarely had a toponymic surname, for they were usually unable to change where they lived, unless moved to a different manor by their lord. It was only after the feudal system broke down, following outbreaks of the Black Death from 1349 onwards, that men of historically unfree families were generally able to migrate to find work. By this time, hereditary family names were the norm in much of the country, except in northern England, where toponymic family names were still being freshly coined as late as the 15th century, especially in large towns like York. It probably explains why this type of family name is more dominant in northern England than in any other part of the country.

Medieval toponymic surnames took a number of different linguistic forms, the commonest of which placed a preposition before the place-name. The primary language of record was Latin, so most of these surnames were written down as Latin de 'of' + a vernacular form of the place-name, often with a superscript suspension sign (printed as an apostrophe,) to stand for an unspecified Latin ending. Henrico de Gayton' (1220–1) is an example; see Gayton. This clerical convention went into decline in the second half of the 14th century, when the preposition was increasingly dropped. This may have been a spoken usage in Middle English long before it was reflected in written usage, but in Anglo-Norman French speech (which until the 15th century was the preferred language of the aristocracy and upper gentry) it is clear that a preposition was commonly used, because in some Anglo-Norman family names the preposition became fused with the place-name, as happened, for example, in the case of Dando (from Aunou-le-Faucon in Orne) and Devereux (from Évreux in Eure).

3.3.1.2 Ethnic and regional names

A smaller number of locative family names are based on a noun or adjective denoting a person from a particular country, region, or town. When they denote a man's country of origin, as in Allmand ('German'), Brabazon ('man from Brabant'), English, French, Fleming, Irish, Pickard ('man from Picardy'), Scott, and Wallis ('man from Wales'), they are called ethnic names, as are some of the equivalent toponymic forms Allman, Brabin, Burgoyne, England, France, Flanders, Ireland, and Scotland, although Wales sets a false trail, as this particular name is in most if not all cases from the place so named near Sheffield in Yorkshire. Others, such as Angwin ('man from Anjou'), Burgoyne (Old French Burginon 'man from Burgundy'), Devenish ('man from Devon'), Surridge (Anglo-Norman French surreis 'man from the south'), and Western ('man from the west'), may be termed regional names. However, the distinction between an ethnic name and a regional one is not always easy to make.

3.3.1.3 Topographic names

Unlike toponymic, ethnic, and regional surnames, topographic surnames in the medieval period were largely the preserve of those who belonged to the lower social orders, such as minor free tenants and unfree tenants such as villeins and cottars (cottagers who performed particular duties for their lord of the manor). The names are drawn, not from (often unintelligible) place-names, but from common vocabulary items referring to local features of the landscape and townscape at or near which the owner of the name lived, as in Ash, Brook, Field, Green, Hall, Hill, Kirk, Marsh, Mill, Pound, Style, Townsend, and Wood. Some of these names, for example Hall, Mill, and Pound, do double duty, being both locative and occupational names, denoting men who worked at the lord's hall, or at a mill, or at an animal pound where stray livestock were put.

The distinction between toponymic and topographic family names is a useful one in lowland England, where an agrarian economy predominated. Here most people lived in nucleated villages, whose settlement names were usually ancient and therefore partly or wholly obscure in meaning to their late medieval inhabitants. Topographic names in such localities were meaningful locative phrases, being drawn from contemporary vocabulary items. There were, however, some settlement names that were identical to Middle English topographic terms, and here the distinction breaks down. Wick is a typical example: it has both a topographic origin in most regions of England (commonly denoting a dairy farm) and a toponymic origin, especially in south-west England, where there are numerous villages so called. This ambiguity is especially apparent in upland regions or areas of heathland, where the main economy was a pastoral one (breeding livestock), and the settlements were often of a dispersed kind, consisting of individual farmsteads, often named from a commonplace Middle English topographic term. This is why there are so many places in Devon called Ford and Co(o)mbe, for example, and why the derived family names Ford and Coombe are heavily concentrated in Devon and neighbouring counties. In such regions it is often impossible to draw a distinction between topographic and toponymic names.

Topographic family names originated in several different linguistic forms, which have consequences for the spellings of their modern descendants. The most usual formation was with a preposition and definite article, mostly Middle English atte 'at the', which also sometimes appears as atter and atten (respectively with female and masculine or neuter grammatical inflections) when the topographical term begins with a vowel. Typical examples are atte Grene 'at the green', atten aldrett 'at the alder grove', and atter oke 'at the oak tree'. Other prepositions include by, in, over, and under. In most cases the preposition and article were eventually dropped from the name, usually by the early 15th century, but sometimes the preposition survives in the modern name, fused to the topographic term, as in Atwood, Bywater, and Underhill. Sometimes, through misdivision of the Middle English elements, the final consonant of the preposition or the article remains before a following vowel, as in Tash, Nash, and Rash from atte Ash, atten Ashe, and atter Ashe 'at the ash tree'.

There are a number of topographic family names that allude to points of the compass. In the East Riding of Yorkshire Suddaby derives from a Middle English adverbial phrase suth i(n) by (Old Scandinavian sudr í bý) 'south in the village', for someone who lived at the south end of a settlement. Westoby ('west in the village'), and Easterby and Oxtoby (both 'east in the village') originated in the same way in the same county. Some examples of the family name Beeston probably derive from a Middle English topographic phrase **byesteton* (Old English bī ēastan tūne) '(land or settlement) to the east of the village'. The family names Easton, Weston, Norton, and Sutton partly derive from this type of expression, but without the preposition.

Mention must also be made of sign names. Middle English surnames like atte Swan and atte Belle were probably borne by innkeepers whose taverns bore a swan or a bell as the inn sign, and these are duly cited in the entries for Swan and Bell. There is as yet no evidence that any of these gave rise to a hereditary family name, but the possibility remains open.

Anglo-Norman French was a spoken language among the English gentry for much of the late medieval period, and like Latin it was also a written language for professional clerks. In the written record of people's names it is common to find Anglo-Norman French prepositions and articles replacing English ones, as in de la Grene and del Wode. Partly or fully latinized equivalents, like ad grenam 'at the green', are also common, as are hybrid forms like ad le Grene and super le Grene. Generally speaking these clerical translations do not survive as family names, with the possible exception of a few names where the French grammatical elements appear to have become fused to the main part of the name. We seem to see this in names like Delafield, Dellaway, and Delbridge, but more research is needed to discover whether these are genuine topographic hybrids or whether they are quite different names that have been altered by folk etymology to look like de l(a) + an English topographic word. Dallimore (Delamer, Delamere), however, is undoubtedly toponymic, from one or more places in Normandy called La Mare.

A relatively small group of names take the form of a topographic noun with a suffix denoting 'person (who lives there)', either -man, -er, or -ing. Names in -er and -man, like Hiller and Hillman ('dweller on the hill'), are often interchangeable and mostly occur in south-east England, especially Hampshire, Surrey, Sussex, and Kent. Names in -ing are particular to Devon, where names like Brooking ('dweller by the brook') and Thorning ('dweller by the thorn') were still mainly located in 1881.

3.3.2 RELATIONSHIP NAMES

This is the second largest category of English family names. A handful of them are formed from a single word for a particular relation, such as Cousin and Eames (Middle English eme 'uncle'), Nephew and Neave (both 'nephew'), Mowe and Muff (both from Middle English mogh 'son-in-law'). Occasionally these are qualified by a personal name (e.g. Wilcokesosin 'Wilcock's cousin') but these compounds rarely survive as hereditary names, except for a handful of names formed with -mogh, such as Watmough ('Walter's son-in-law'). The vast majority of relationship names contain the personal name or given name of a father, mother, or some other family member, or very occasionally a father's or master's surname. Family names derived from the father's given name (patronymics) are in the great majority, while those from the mother's name (metronymics) are common but less frequent, typically being derived from the given name of a woman who had been widowed and who outlived her husband for a substantial period of time—long enough to become an established figure in a neighbourhood.

During the period when surnames were being coined and becoming hereditary family names (roughly the 12th to the 15th centuries) profound changes were occurring in the English personal name stock. Until the beginning of the 13th century there were in fact two name stocks, one Anglo-Norman and the other English. In the decades just before 1200, the once extensive native English (Anglo-Saxon) stock was in such severe decline that by about 1230 it had almost completely disappeared as a source for naming children, being replaced by a much smaller name stock mostly drawn from the Anglo-Norman one. Where once an English boy might be christened Cutbold (Old English Cūðbeald) or an English girl Seburgh (Old English Sæburg), they would now be more likely christened with a Norman name such as Robert or Margaret. As it happened, hereditary surnaming among ordinary English folk began to grow during the 13th century, just in time for the last one or two generations of adults bearing Anglo-Saxon personal names to be the fathers and mothers referred to in many of our modern English family names. Thus from Cutbold and Seburgh we get the family names Cobbold and Seabury. Of the very few Anglo-Saxon personal names that remained in continued use until the end of the medieval period, Old English Ēadmund and Ēadgýð are still well known as the given names Edmund and Edith. A slightly larger group were still in occasional use as given names throughout the 14th century, especially the female names Aldith and Godith, which are sources of the family names Allday and Goodey.

3.3.2.1 Old English personal names

The Anglo-Saxon personal name stock was broadly of two types. Men and women of higher social status usually possessed a dithematic name (a name composed of two elements or 'themes'). Some of these compound names may originally have been coined as meaningful phrases, such as Gōdwine ('good friend', see Goodwin), but many others, like Wulffrið ('wolf + 'peace', see Woolfrey) are arbitrary compounds with no semantic connection. The other type was monothematic (i.e. composed of only one linguistic element). Some, like Dodda (see Dodd) and Pymma (see Pym), are of uncertain etymology, but others derive either from a known Old English word, such as snel 'swift, bold' (one source of Snell) or from a shortened form of a dithematic name, as is the case with **Pēoda* (see Theed), short for a name like Pēodbeorht (see Thebridge). Pet forms of Old English names sometimes have a hypocoristic -k- suffix, such as -uc (see section 3.3.2.4); for example, Baddock is from Baduca, a pet form of a name such as Beaduric (see Betteridge). Many more, like Balding and Snelling, have a (hypocoristic?) suffix -ing, while others are extended by Old English -mann, as in Edman. Women's names beginning in Old English Ēad-, Eald-, and Gōd- are often found in Middle English pet forms with the suffix -us, hence the family names Edis, Aldous, and Goodes.

3.3.2.2 Old Scandinavian personal names

Scandinavian personal names were added to the Anglo-Saxon name stock by Viking settlers in the late 9th to the 11th centuries, mainly in northern and eastern England. They have similar patterns of linguistic formation to the Old English ones. Typical dithematic names are Arnketil (a male name composed of the elements rn 'eagle' + ketill 'kettle, cauldron', source of the family name Arkell) and Gunnhildr (a female name composed of the elements **gunthi-* + hildr, both of which mean 'battle', source of the family name Gunnell). There are numerous monothematic names such as Gammell (from gamall 'old') and Orm (from ormr 'snake'). Pet forms include Tófi and Tóki (probably short forms of Þórfinnr and Þórketil), which survive in the family names Tovey and Tooke. As the Viking settlers integrated with the English, their names were adapted to English phonetic and grammatical practices. So, for example, Thurstan is from Old Scandinavian Þórsteinn, anglicized as Old English Þurstān. New hybrid names were also created, combining name elements from both languages, as in Ketteridge, which is from Anglo-Scandinavian **Cytelric*. Norwegian Vikings who settled in Ireland picked up some Irish personal names, which they brought with them to north-west England. Among these was Old Irish Colmán, the main source of the modern family name Coleman.

3.3.2.3 Anglo-Norman French personal names

The Anglo-Norman name stock was more varied in origin than the Anglo-Saxon one, reflecting the history of Normandy and its neighbouring territories as well as Norman settlement in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Before its own Norman conquest, north-west France had been occupied by Celts, ruled by Romans (who introduced as the spoken language a form of Late Latin, known as Romance), and then conquered by German-speaking Franks (hence the name France). The Franks adopted Romance as their own language and called it French, but they kept much of their Continental Germanic personal name stock, and this was freely borrowed by the Norsemen (or Normans) who founded the dukedom of Normandy in the 10th century. By far the majority of the Normans who came to England bore Frankish personal names modified by French grammar and pronunciation, reflecting either the Picard dialect in the northern part of Normandy or the Parisian dialect in southern Normandy. As with all Germanic names, the majority of them were dithematic, some of them becoming particularly common in England, first among the Anglo-Normans and then generally among the population of England and Scotland as a whole. Of these, Henry, Robert, Walter, William, and the female name Allis (Alice) are still familiar to us as modern given names, as is Maud, whose variable pronunciation in Anglo-Norman French and Middle English produced the family names Malt and Moult. Many personal names of this type fell out of general use before the end of the 13th century but are preserved in family names such as Everard and Savory. Continental Germanic monothematic names were also common among the Normans, some of them simply short forms of dithematic names such as Normanno-Picard Wass and its Parisian dialect equivalent Gaze. Others were derived from Germanic vocabulary words, such as Franco, ‘the Frank’ or ‘the free’, one source of the modern family name Frank. These short forms sometimes have an Old French grammatical inflection, as in Bacon, from Old French Bacun, the oblique form of Continental Germanic Bacco (a personal name of uncertain etymology).

Another important source of Anglo-Norman French personal names was Christian literature and legend. Scriptural names included Adam, Andrew, James, John, Mary, Matthew, Peter, Philip, Simon, and Thomas. Some of these have Hebrew or Aramaic etymologies, others have Greek ones. Most of them were transmitted via Greek to the Latin Vulgate Bible, and it was from the Latin forms that Old French developed its own pronunciations. Matthew, for example, sometimes appears in Old French as Mahieu, which is the source of the English family name Mayhew, and the regular Old French forms of Peter (Per and Peres) have given us Pear and Pearce. Surprisingly perhaps, Mary was not one of the most frequent given names in post-Conquest England; like Anne, the name of the mother of St Mary, it only became truly popular during the 15th and 16th centuries.

Considerably more popular than Mary were the names of several early Christian female saints, whose cults exercised a major influence on the French and Norman personal name stock. Examples include Margaret, Catharine, Cecily, and Agnes. From their Anglo-Norman French forms we get the family names Marritt, Catlin, Sisley, and Annis. The names of some male saints from Christian legend also became widely popular in France and elsewhere in Europe, including Lawrence and Nicholas. A number of male saints’ names, Biblical and non-Biblical, were used for women as well. Consequently it is difficult to distinguish the gender of the Middle English forms of Dennis, John, and Julian unless the scribe has latinized them, giving them gender-specific inflections (e.g. nominative Dionysia, Johanna, and Juliana for the female names).

Names of Greek, Latin, or Romance origin, but not associated with the name of a saint, include Alexander, the name of the Macedonian conqueror, Alexander the Great, whose exploits were made famous throughout medieval Europe in the Alexander romances. Another is Old French Nihel, Niel, from Latin Nigellus, a derivative of niger ‘black(-haired)’. It was much favoured among Normans at the time of the Conquest and thereafter, and is a principal source of the family name Neal. There is no evidence for the traditional view that Norman French Niel is from Old Scandinavian Njáll, a borrowing of the Irish name Niall (see Neill) by Vikings during their time in Ireland. However, in later centuries, as the pronunciation became homophonous, the two names became inextricably interwoven. Several personal names like Nigellus have been coined from general-vocabulary words and may have originated as nicknames. Old French has many such names, including Durant ‘enduring, steadfast’, hence Durrand, and R(o)ussel, a diminutive of rous ‘red(-haired)’, hence Russell.

Among those who helped William Duke of Normandy conquer England in and after 1066 were high-ranking Bretons. Their names are found mostly in eastern England, where William gave extensive lands to Breton military leaders, and they gave rise to family names such as Harvey, Jeckell, Wiggin, and Wymark. The only ones in general use today are Alan (see Allen) and Brian (see Bryant), although the popularity of Brian as a given name in modern Britain and Ireland is mainly due to the popularity of the native Irish name (of Celtic origin and probably cognate with the Breton one).

The Norman ruling classes, who were descended from Danish Vikings, did not entirely abandon their Old Scandinavian personal names, adapting at least some of them to Old French pronunciation and sometimes to Frankish and Romance name formations, including hypocoristic or pet forms. Thus Old Scandinavian Ásketil became Anschetil in Normandy, influenced by Continental Germanic **Ans-* (‘god’). This was then altered to Ansketin, as though -il was a diminutive suffix and could be substituted by the Old French diminutive -in. The reduced forms Anketin and Asketin were subsequently brought by the Normans to England, where they were further reduced to Antin and Askin.

A number of Old Scandinavian dithematic names began with Thór (the name of the god of thunder). In Old French speech this was pronounced with initial /t/, so the Norman French form of Bóraldr appears in early English records as Turolde, alongside Thorald (the usual form among Danish Vikings in Anglo-Saxon England), hence the modern family names Torode, Turrell, and Thorold.

The Old English, Old Scandinavian, and Continental Germanic names formed distinctive name stocks, but as they are all Germanic in origin they naturally share a number of related or cognate names, especially of the dithematic type. Consequently it is not always possible to tell in which of these name stocks a particular Middle English name-form originated. Osborne, for example, could be from late Old English or Continental Germanic Ōsbern. The problem is exacerbated by simplifications in pronunciation, which led to the merging in early Middle English of what were once distinct Old English names. Algar, for example, may represent several Old English names as well as a Continental Germanic one. Occasionally there is further confusion with names of other name stocks. Simon and its common variant Simmond mostly represent the Biblical New Testament name Simon, but it is impossible to distinguish it from Middle English forms of Old Scandinavian Sigmundr and the cognate Continental Germanic Sigmund.

3.3.2.4 Pet forms of Norman French and Middle English personal names

From the late 13th century pet forms were commonplace among the lower social classes but rare among the gentry. They usually involved a reduction of the full name to its main stressed syllable, yielding family names such as Cole, Duke, Judd, Law, Phipp, Sim, and Watt (for Nicholas, Marmaduke, Jordan, Lawrence, Philip, Simon, and Walter). A peculiar feature of Middle English pet forms is the creation of rhyming short forms, such as Dick, Hich, and Hick for Rick and Rich (Richard); Dobb and Hobb for Robb (Robert); Daw and Haw for Raw (Ralph); Dodge and Hodge for Rodge (Roger). Similar in effect is the addition of a prosthetic consonant to a name beginning with a vowel, such as Nell (for Ellis) and Bibb and Tibb (for Isabel).

To these short forms were added a variety of diminutive suffixes with a hypocoristic function. Most of them were of Old French origin, including single diminutives like -in (sometimes reduced to -y), -on, -un, -el, -et, and -ot, and double diminutives like -elet, -elot, -elin, -inet, and -inot. Given that the Middle English personal-name stock itself was largely borrowed from the French one, it is likely that many of the pet forms coined in this way were introduced to Britain, ready-made, by the Normans. Common examples are Addy and Adnitt (from Middle English Ady, Adinet, and Adinot, pet forms of Adam), Allott (for Alice), Collin (for Nicholas), Hewett and Hewlett (for Old French Hue, i.e. Hugh), Marion and Marriott (for Mary and Margery), Parlet and Perrin (for Per, i.e. Peter), Robin (for Robert), and Tomlin (for Thomas).

The two most popular hypocoristic suffixes, -kin and -cok, were linguistically not French, however. Low German and Middle Dutch -kin was brought to England in the wake of the Norman Conquest by Flemish and Picard merchants and weavers, and it soon became the most popular hypocoristic suffix for common given names. Of the innumerable examples in this dictionary, Atkin (Adam), Larkin (Lawrence), Parkin (Peter), Simpkin (Simon), and Watkin (Walter) are typical. The native English suffix -cock is a double diminutive formed with -k- + the hypocoristic suffix -oc. It has nothing to do with the word cock ‘male bird’ or the spurious word cok, which Reaney supposed to have existed in Middle English with the sense ‘boy’. It became almost as popular a suffix as -kin and is preserved in many family names such as Adcock (from Adam), Simcock, and Wilcock. These -k suffixes were often reduced to -ke in Middle English, from which we get family names such as Wilke, a reduced form of Wilcock or Wilkin. Jack, the commonest English pet form of John, is similarly formed but is not an English coinage; it was borrowed from the Flemings and Picards, in whose usage Jakke was a denasalized pronunciation of Janke, a reduced form of Jankin.

Finally, there are some rare Middle English hypocoristic suffixes such as -cus, which survives in Edgoose (from Middle English Edecus, a pet form of Edith), and -man, found in Hickman (for Richard), Human (for Hugh), and Pateman (for Patrick), and which may be Continental Germanic -man, brought to England by Flemings, or Old English -mann.

3.3.2.5 Names ending in -s and -son

Relationship names containing the given name of a father or mother occur in three different grammatical forms, sometimes with no suffix, sometimes with the suffix -s, and sometimes with the suffix -son. All three can be found more or less anywhere in late medieval England, but in different proportions in different parts of the country and at different social levels. The early history of these three types is somewhat obscured by clerical practice, which tended to render relationship names in a standard Latin formula, in which filius ‘son’ or filia ‘daughter’ was prefixed to the given name, itself often latinized. It was not until the late 14th century that this practice was fully abandoned, and because it was applied indiscriminately to names of all three grammatical types, it is not always clear which of the types to attribute these early latinized forms to.

Those with no suffix are the earliest type of relationship name to have become hereditary. It is therefore the usual source of family names derived from the Anglo-Saxon and Anglo-Norman names that had disappeared as given names by the end of the 13th century or shortly thereafter. Those of Old English derivation include Edgar, Manning, and Woolsey. Old Scandinavian and Anglo-Scandinavian names are responsible for Dolphin, Gunn, and Tolley. Continental Germanic names lie behind Ledgard and Major. None of these examples occur with -son or a genitival -s. In the later period (1250–1400) suffixless names also arose from popular given names, such as Ibbott, Jack, Thomas, and Watkin. Many are found in the Midlands and north England, but they are more common in south England (not to mention Wales, where such names are a modern formation).

Relationship names with genitival -s (usually elliptical for -s + son) became widespread in England from the late 13th century onwards, as ordinary folk began to acquire surnames, and to a considerable extent they supplanted the suffixless type. They were especially common in south and south-west England and the West Midlands, where they still predominate, as can be seen in the modern distributions of names like Hodges, Roberts, and Wilkins. In the West Midland dialect of Middle English an alternative genitive singular -en was sometimes used, though it has rarely survived in modern surnames; Timmin (beside Timms) is possibly one of them.

Names with final -son, for example Dixon, Jackson, and Williamson, are massively concentrated in the north of England. Here we also find a small number of names based on a common occupational term or surname (such as Clarkson, Cookson, and Smithson). There are also a very few -son names based on a locative family name, for example Clappison, from the West Yorkshire name Clapham + -son. English family names in -son are usually quite late in formation (mid- to late 14th century and early 15th century) and were borne almost exclusively by the lower class of minor free tenants and unfree tenants.

The equivalent Anglo-Norman French fil or fitz ‘son’, prefixed to a personal name, has a different history. It is occasionally found in documents of the 12th century and later, and it may often have been used as a purely written convention by clerks for a name that did not actually have a prefix. In spoken usage it belonged exclusively, however, to the Anglo-Norman gentry and aristocracy, and there are a few surviving family names in which Fitz has become fused to the personal name, such as FitzAlan and Fitzwilliam.

3.3.3 OCCUPATIONAL NAMES

This is the third largest category and it reflects the huge growth in urban economic activity from the late 12th century onwards. It led to the rise of great cities and boroughs like London, Bristol, Chester, York, and Norwich, and to the development of hundreds of market towns serving the needs of rural communities. The wealthiest of the town burgesses traded in exports and imports of commodities like wool, cloth, spices, and wine. From these come family names such as Draper, Marchant (‘merchant’), Mercer (‘dealer in costly textiles like silk and velvet’), Spicer, and Vinter (‘wine merchant’). The cloth trade was particularly complex and extensive. Wool had to be carded (hence Carder), spun (hence Spinner), and the threads woven into cloth by men and women named Webb, Webber, Webster, or Weaver. The raw cloth had to be cleansed (Fuller, Walker, and Tucker represent this trade) and dyed (from which come the surnames Dyer, Lister, Wader, and Wadman, the last two denoting either a dealer in the blue dye called woad or a dyer who used woad).

Such specializing can similarly be found for all the main trades that provided clothing, headgear, footwear, housewares (earthen and metal pots, pans, buckets, ladles, cups, and bowls), food, drink, weaponry (bows, arrows, swords, knives, armour), horse gear (saddles, harnesses), buildings, and vehicles, to mention a few. Large numbers of surnames from these trades will be found in the dictionary, too many to cite here, but some of them can be illustrated by looking at the variety of linguistic forms that occur in the medieval records. The language of post-Conquest towns was mainly English but partly Anglo-Norman French. Some towns even had two boroughs, an English one and a French one, with separate markets. Even when the boroughs merged, French remained an important language of commerce for the burgesses and for the lawyers and clerks who provided them with legal services. In this way many French words for goods and services, and for those who earned their living from them, entered English speech. Marchant is from Old French merchaunt, but its equivalent native English word survives in the name Chapman. One origin of Seller is Old French sel(i)er ‘saddler’, but it is not as common as the equivalent English Sadler ‘maker of saddles’. English Arrowsmith, Flesher (‘dealer in flesh’), Glover, Smith, Hellier (‘roofer’), and Wright (‘joiner’) are synonymous with French-derived Fletcher, Butcher, Ganter, Feaver, Tyler, and Carpenter. As can be seen even from this small selection, many of the French and native English occupational terms that lie behind modern surnames have not survived as Modern English words, even where the occupation itself has survived.

Occupational names usually take one of the following forms. Some are self-explanatory compounds, like Cartwright and Ironmonger. Others are compounds with -man, for example Palfreyman ‘man responsible for the palfreys or riding horses, a groom’ and Cheeseman ‘maker or seller of cheese’. Such formations are distinct from those formed with -man in the sense ‘servant’, as in Priestman (‘servant of the priest’) and Fentiman (‘servant of a man surnamed Fenton’).

By far the most common occupational names are those in which the suffixes -(i)er (of either English or French origin) or -our (Old French) have been added to a word denoting an object or an activity: Chandler (‘seller of candles’), Fewster (‘maker of saddle trees’), Furber (‘polisher of armour’), Hatter, Salter (‘salt-merchant’), Skipper (‘maker of skips or baskets’), Soper (‘soap maker’), Sumner (‘court official who issued summonses’), Tanner, Taylor, and Turner are a few of the hundreds of such names. A small number have a doublet in -ster, such as Baxter, Brewster, Dexter, and Webster. This Old English suffix originally denoted a female (baker, brewer, dyer, or weaver, in these instances) but by the time hereditary surnames were formed from these names the distinction of gender was no longer present.

Rural communities and households of the gentry generated some occupations that are recalled in modern surnames. Specialist crafts that every village or manor needed were notably those of the Smith and the Miller. Agricultural occupations included those of the Hurd (‘herdsman’), Shepherd, Coward (‘cowherd’), Hoggard (‘pig keeper’ or ‘one who looks after young sheep’), Hayward (‘man employed to look after the hedges and fences that kept livestock out (or in)’), and Pinder (‘man in charge of the village pound for stray animals’), as well as those from seasonal occupations, such as Plowman and Thresher. Some lords of the manor would require a Parker (to look after the deer park), a Forrester, a Woodward, a Hunter, and a Fowler (‘bird catcher’). The Granger was a farm bailiff (especially on monastic granges), while the Reeve was an unfree tenant who collected the lord’s rents and summoned offenders to the lord’s court. In a wealthy man’s house, in a village or town, might be a Clark, a Spencer (‘household steward’), a Page, and perhaps some minstrels or entertainers named Crowther (‘fiddler’), Harper, or Piper. In the kitchen might be a Cook, and serving the local churches might be a Sexton and a Chaplin.

Servants and apprentices sometimes had a defining surname such as Sargent, Nave (Middle English knave), and Prentice (short for Old French apprentis), or they bore an elliptical surname such as Parsons (short for Middle English Personesseriaunt ‘parson’s servant’).

3.3.4 STATUS NAMES

Status names are sometimes treated as a subgroup of occupational names, although strictly speaking they do not denote the means of earning a living but rather the social rank of a man, as in the case of Bond (‘unfree tenant’), Freeman, Franklin (both ‘free tenant’ or ‘of free but not noble birth’), and Burgess (‘freeman of a borough’). Surnames such as Knight and Lord may belong here, too, but it is uncertain how far they are to be understood literally and how far they may be interpreted as nicknames. At the highest levels of society were honorary offices like Butler and Marshall, but lower down the social scale Marshall was a name for a farrier.

3.3.5 NICKNAMES

Nicknames are in many cases the most challenging names to explain. There are innumerable varieties, formally and semantically, and because the contexts and situations that gave rise to them in individual cases were almost never recorded, there is more uncertainty about their original meanings than any other category of surname. Even the classification of a surname as ‘nickname’ is at times a shot in the dark, for want of another explanation. The category is also blurred at the edges, overlapping formally and semantically with other categories. The least that a dictionary such as FaNBI can do is to try and identify the word from which the name is most probably derived and not to offer hostages to fortune by over-interpretation of the possible semantic implications.

At the core of this set of names are nicknames alluding to physical attributes or personality traits. Some are from Old French, many originating in Norman families, such as Bassett (a diminutive form of bas ‘short in stature’), Blunt (‘fair-haired’), Gernon (‘moustache’), Grant (‘tall in stature’), and Hussey (‘booted’). The majority are Middle English coinages (of English, Scandinavian, or French etymology), such as Armstrong, Beard, Bragg (‘brisk, lively’), Broad, Brown, Crisp (‘curly-haired’), Crookshank (‘crooked leg’), Curtis (‘courtly, refined’), Geake (‘fool, simpleton’), Glew (‘wise, clever’), Jolliffe (‘cheerful, lively’), Lemmon (‘lover, sweetheart’), Longbone, Proud, Redhead, Quant (‘wise, skilful, cunning’), Sharp, Small, Tait (‘merry, lively’), Thynne, Toogood, Wild, Wise, and Witty. The exact sense of some names of this type can be elusive. Legg and Foot may allude to someone with a bad leg or foot but there are other possibilities, such as a reference to long or short legs or to large feet.

Complimentary and uncomplimentary names look straightforward enough, but it would be a mistake to take them only at face value. Goodfellow is literally ‘good fellow’ but the phrase was sometimes used in Middle English to denote a rascal. Nicknames then, as now, could be meant ironically, and disparaging ones are often given in good-natured jest, so it should not be assumed that the bearers of surnames like Peabody (‘peacock body’), Mockler (Old French mal clerc ‘bad clerk’), Mussard (‘absent-minded, stupid’), or Thewlis (‘lacking in moral fibre, immoral’) always deserved the disapproval implied by their sobriquets. The very fact that such names became hereditary suggests that the families that bore them took little or no offence. This caveat applies equally to nicknames that may seem obscene to modern sensibilities, like Ballock (‘testicle’) and Liquorish (Middle English likerous ‘lecherous’). Names like Shacklady and Tiplady (‘knock lady’) are probably from phrases denoting the sexual act, as indeed may be Waghorn, Wagstaff, and Shakespeare, although definite evidence that horn, staff, and spear could denote ‘penis’ in Middle English has yet to be found. There may have been something disreputable about Shakespeare, nevertheless. A certain Hugh Shakespeare, before being admitted as a fellow of Merton College, Oxford, in 1487, was required to change his surname (to Sawnder) ‘because it is of ill repute’. A possible alternative explanation in this case is that the name may have been given to a professional soldier, referring perhaps to the brandishing of arms before battle. Most probably Waghorn was synonymous with Hornblower (a medieval term for the town watchman), while Wagpole and Wagstaff could have been names for a beadle or some other civic or manorial officer who shook his staff of office in token of his authority. Names with this linguistic construction (verb + noun) may often have had occupational connotations, as Catchpole (Old French cache pol ‘chase fowl’) certainly did, as it was used in Middle English as a mocking term for a debt collector. Threadgold was presumably given to an embroiderer. Turnbull may have been a name for a bull-herd or cattle drover, Culpepper for a spicer, and no doubt Trussler (Old French trusse loue ‘bind wolf’) was a name for a wolf hunter. Makepeace could have been given to a professional arbitrator, one who helped to settle disputes without going to the law, but it could just as well have been given in irony to a troublemaker.

Not all phrasal nicknames are formed with verb + noun. Doolittle, Golightly, Sturtivant (‘leap forward’), and Waddilove (‘wade or go deeply in love’) consist of a verb + adverb or prepositional phrase, and there are a number of names derived from expressions of speech like Old French bel sire ‘fair sir’, a term of address, and Old French bel ch(i)ere, which had various senses, including ‘good cheer’, perhaps also a greeting or farewell. Both are sources of Belcher. Blessings and oaths are preserved in Debney (Old French dieu (le) benie ‘God bless him’), Godsave (Middle English (on) Godes half ‘for God’s sake’), Mothersill (Middle English (bi min) moderes soule ‘by my mother’s soul’), and Pardoe (Old French par dieu ‘by God’).

From a semantic point of view most nicknames fall into one of three types, the literal, the metaphoric, and the metonymic. Most of the names discussed so far had a literal application, unless used ironically. Some that look superficially like surnames of occupation, office, or status are clearly not so and must be figures of speech. Abbot, Bishop, Cardinal, Monk, Pope, Priest, and Prior are all recorded as names of laypeople. Nunn is a man’s surname. Serfs are called King, Lord, Sheriff, and Squire. No evidence has been found to support the notion that men so named were employed by or were tenants of an abbot or the king, and so forth. Perhaps these names were metaphoric, implying that their original bearers looked or behaved like an ecclesiastical or secular dignitary and were therefore haughty or hypocritical. Alternatively, the names may have been metonymic, acquired from playing these roles in a local pageant, game, or ritual. The Boy Bishop, the Abbot or Lord of Misrule, the King of the May, the King of the Bean, and the Lord of the Harvest were all central roles in medieval seasonal ceremonies.

Metaphorical use of words for animals, birds, and fish is abundant, but it is often difficult to be sure what characteristic of the creature is being alluded to. It is reasonable to infer that Crane denoted someone with long legs, and from Middle English and later vocabulary uses we know that simpletons were called by the bird name Woodcock and by the fish name Chubb, and that Gudgeon (denoting the fish) was also used as a word for a lazy person. Chaucer's description of the summoner in the Canterbury Tales as 'hot he was and lecherous as a sparrow' draws on a popular belief about sparrows that presumably lies behind at least some coinages of the surname Sparrow. However, Fox could imply either of the two characteristics traditionally associated with the animal: red hair and cunning. The magpie (Middle English pie) is a notorious scavenger and stealer, has a loud cackling voice and bright black-and-white plumage. Which of these gave rise to the surname Pye one can only guess. Other bird names, of unclear significance, include Coe ('jackdaw'), Finch, Kite, Laverack or Lark, Nightingale, Partridge, Peacock, Speight ('woodpecker'), Starling, Wildgoose, and Wren. Other fish names are Pike and Trout. Animal names include Bull, Coney ('rabbit'), and Stott ('bullock'), perhaps applied to men who were strongly built or headstrong. Goate, Ramm, and Stagg may sometimes have been given to supposedly lecherous men. Hare, Hart, and Mouse may have denoted a timorous person, or perhaps a fast runner.

Metonymic names are the most enigmatic. The relationship they bear to their eponymous bearers is not through a perceived resemblance (as with metaphoric names) but by a contextual connection—an idea, object, or event with which the person was associated, whether habitually or on a single occasion, as already suggested for names like Bishop and King. The surname Bull may have been one of these, if given to someone who looked after the bull(s) rather than someone who resembled one. Unfortunately the contexts that might have explained the origination of a nickname have almost never survived. Occasionally a variation in the name-form gives a clue, if not the entire answer. Ranulf Flambard (d. 1128), bishop of Durham, was also known as Ranulf Passeflambard 'pass the torch', an allusion apparently to Ranulf's role as a royal advocate, but what figurative sense 'passing the torch' might carry here is uncertain. In theory the nickname Crown might have been given to someone who wore or made crowns (garlands or chaplets) or to someone with a physically distinctive head. In one instance, however, it was borne by several members of a 13th-century Nottinghamshire family otherwise known as Madythecroune ('mad in the head'). One could not expect to have anticipated this explanation, or reliably offer it, without the evidence of the fuller form of the name, and it may yet not be the right explanation for any of the modern examples.

The explanations of many single-word surnames probably lie in similarly unstated or elided linguistic items (especially verb phrases), whose absence leaves us guessing as to the name's meaning. Many metonymic names derive from abstract nouns. It is quite possible that Peace was sometimes elliptical for Makepeace, but there is no way of knowing whether it named someone who practised the virtue or merely wished for it. Nor do we know whether Barrett (Old French barat 'strife') belonged to someone who caused trouble or tried to prevent it, or Comfort to someone who gave it or sought it.

This lack of clarity is especially common in the numerous nicknames that derive from nouns for products, such as food, clothing, tools, and containers. P. H. Reaney was convinced that all such names were occupational names, not nicknames; in his view they were metonyms for, and therefore synonymous with, the usual nouns for a maker or seller of such goods. Cheese, therefore, was metonymic for Cheeser 'cheese maker'. However, all the name tells us is that the man was associated with cheese; he may have made it or he may have liked it as a food, or both. The point comes into sharper focus with names like Blade, Hood, Lace, and Mantell, where there is a high probability that they were nicknames given to men who wore or used those items, whether or not in some cases they also made or sold them. All such names are categorized as nicknames in FaNBI entries.

3.4 The development of hereditary family names in England

The earliest hereditary family names in England are recorded in some Norman families in the late 11th century, for example Bigot and Giffard. By the middle of the 15th century almost every person had one. But family-name development was a slow process and a complex one, varying by social class and by region.

During the 12th and 13th centuries non-hereditary surnaming (or descriptive bynaming) spread down through the social classes, first to the lower gentry and town burgesses, then to well-off free tenants, and finally to small free tenants and the unfree peasantry. By the middle of the 14th century almost everyone who was not a pauper had a byname or 'surname' of some sort, however impermanent. The growth of hereditary surnaming took longer. By about 1250 most of the powerful land-owning families used a hereditary surname, mostly toponymics from their estates in England or their former estates in Normandy. This was true also of many of the lower gentry in the south, the Midlands, and East Anglia, and by 1300 they all had one, as did a significant proportion of free tenants. Practice in the towns and boroughs was more mixed, with hereditary and non-hereditary naming co-existing in the late 14th century in southern England and the Midlands and well into the 15th century in northern towns like York.

Indeed, the last region to have more or less universal hereditary naming was northern England, where it was the mid-15th century before it was the general practice. In York and in parts of Lancashire there were still a few people without one in the 16th century. In the Midlands and southern England probably the majority of all families except the poorest had at least one hereditary name by about 1350, though not necessarily a fixed one.

The picture is complicated by the fact that individuals or families could have alternative surnames or aliases, any, all, or none of which could be passed from a father to his sons. Mention was made earlier of the 14th-century Nottingham merchant William de Mekesburgh, who was also known as de Amyas. In around 1300 the Londoner Denis de Grauntebrigge ('of Cambridge') was also known as Denis le Orfevere ('the goldsmith'). Another London goldsmith of that time is recorded in one document as William Everard called de York and in another as William de York called Everard. This kind of flexible surnaming diminished only towards the end of the 14th century, and it could affect hereditary names as well as non-hereditary ones

The exact form that a man's surname took could also vary. A juror of Tuxford in Nottinghamshire, who served on a number of inquisitions just after 1350, is surnamed Wilkynsone, Wilkesone, and Willson. This kind of linguistic variation was particularly common in Yorkshire and Lancashire, where ad hoc, non-hereditary relationship bynames were current well into the 15th century. However, similar variability can also be found in hereditary names, even in south England as late as the 16th century. One Woking (Surrey) family is regularly called both Waterer and Attwater in manorial records of 1547 to 1550. The main reason for this instability is that many inherited surnames still meant what they said as late as the 15th century and beyond. Over many generations successive sons could inherit the same family property in a particular town, village, or locality after which they were named. They could pursue the father's occupation from which the family name derived, and if they bore a relationship surname, it was not uncommonly derived from a personal name that was still in use as a given name in the family. Relationship names derived from Anglo-Saxon and Norman personal names that were no longer in general use by about 1250 to 1300 are a different matter; surnames from these must already have become fixed by the end of the 13th century. Hereditary surnames from nicknames are another exception, thanks to the unpredictability of genetic inheritance.

The modern sense of a hereditary family name (that it does not denote any characteristic of its current owners, and may have no intelligible meaning at all) only became usual towards the end of the 15th century, when the coining of new surnames had become a rarity in most of England, new pronunciation of names was beginning to change them out of all recognition, and migration took families away from their roots.

3.5 The evolution of modern variants<sup>2</sup>

Many modern family names retain a recognizable connection with the source term (e.g. Carter, Heath, Johnson, Norton, Redhead), although in the case of nicknames the sense of the source word has sometimes altered, as it has in Daft (Middle English 'meek, humble') and Pretty (Middle English 'crafty, cunning'). Others, however, have changed in pronunciation or appearance in ways that disguise their original identity. Some are at first sight baffling (like Budgen, a locative name from Bodiam in Sussex); some look intelligible but make no sense (like Ashplant, a relationship name from the medieval personal name Absolon); others look like a well-known name but are derived from something quite different (like Bridgett, a locative name from Bridgwood, Staffs).

The processes that brought about such transformations generally began in the late 15th century or later. They are a direct consequence of hereditary naming coinciding with a long period of linguistic variability and change, which led not only to the differences that now exist between Middle English and Modern English but also to a host of variable, informal pronunciations, unregulated by any need to make contextually relevant lexical sense. These changing pronunciations were recorded by clerks and family members in many different, roughly phonetic spellings, some of which retained an intelligible relationship with the original name, while others did not. Names that had lost connection with their origin could be misheard and miswritten in the records, and were often assimilated to more familiar names or reshaped through hypercorrection and folk etymology to fit better known name-patterns or word-forms.

For many families it was not until the advent of universal literacy in the 20th century that one spelling rather than another became fixed for their name in their locality. The now universal practice of fixed surname spellings is a very recent phenomenon and can give the false impression that all surnames have long possessed historically stable identities as defined and differentiated by their current spellings. This impression is reinforced by the fact that literacy and fixed spellings have almost eliminated variation in surname pronunciation, except in the case of spelling pronunciations, where a name is known through its written rather than its local oral form and the spelling allows alternative pronunciations (as in the surname of the author, J. K. Rowling). Current spellings provide the head forms in modern surname dictionaries, but we cannot expect to make good sense of them if it is not recognized that they are frequently the arbitrary outcome of a long period of oral and orthographic variability, in which onomastic ambiguity and obscurity have proliferated.

Many surnames, therefore, require special attention to the sequence and range of their post-medieval spellings, linked over time, by place, and by family. Different names have often merged, sometimes as a result of general sound changes (as in Wray and Ray; Grave, Greave, and Grieve), and sometimes because final unstressed syllables were confused and mistaken for each other (as in Bramwell and Bramhall, Woodiwiss and Woodhouse). In some names the final syllable underwent a remarkable number of transformations, as did Tattersall (from the Lincolnshire place-name Tattershall), which, when it migrated northward and westward into Yorkshire, Lancashire, and Derbyshire, evolved into Tatterstall, Tattersdale, Tattershaw, Tatterson, Tatterton, Tattersley, and Tattersfield.

3.5.1 POST-MEDIEVAL EXCRESCENT -S

A very common feature in the evolution of family-name variants is the addition of a final excrescent -s to family names that originated without one. This is evident in names such as Mills and Styles, which do not go back to an original Middle English plural form, but are late variants of Mill and Style. This excrescent -s is a common feature of topographic surnames but it is found to some degree in all types of surname. In relationship names the final -s frequently represents an original genitive, but Middle English names with genitive -s often alternated with forms without it (e.g. Wilkins and Wilkin), and perhaps it was analogy with this practice that led to names of other types being given an unhistorical -s in the modern period.

3.6 The geography of English family names

The ability to map modern family names using electronic databases is one of the most important advances in recent English family-name research, leading to vastly improved accuracy in explaining names and identifying name variants. It has confirmed beyond doubt that the majority of English family names have moved relatively short distances over the centuries, in some cases staying remarkably close to their places of origin. Every county still has its own distinctive set of family names, many going back to the medieval period. The reason for this lies in the complex but coherent social networks of local life that endured down the generations, ensuring family stability and influencing the range and frequency of migration. David Hey writes of ‘surname neighbourhoods’, within which the most distinctive local family names moved around over many generations; they were ‘usually no more than ten or twenty miles in radius and were bounded by the nearest market towns’ (Hey 2000: 107). These core families generally stayed in the area over many generations. If they moved further away it was usually by a succession of short-distance migrations over several generations within the same region. Movement southwards from Norfolk into Suffolk and south-east Essex can be seen, for example, in the history of Fosdyke (and its variants) and Gooch (and variants), while there are names like Cramphorn (and variants) that originated in east Hertfordshire, spread into west Essex, and then migrated eastwards as far as the Suffolk border, if not beyond. Hey (2000: 109–11) has shown how surnames of north Staffordshire in the Hearth Tax Returns of the 1660s and 1670s reveal a significant influx of families from Cheshire and Lancashire, more so than migration from neighbouring counties to the east and south of the county.

These patterns of movement, predominantly local in nature, seem to have been only marginally affected by the Industrial Revolution. This is not to deny that some English surnames migrated long distances. Yorkshire names such as Wilberforce, though still most common in that county, have been recorded in 16th-century Sussex, and the Devon name Tapson (a locative name from Topsham in Devon) is found in 18th-century London and Essex. London has exerted an exceptional pull on migrants from all over England and beyond from medieval times to the modern day (see, for example, Ekwall 1956).

4. Family names in Scotland

Scottish names are linked with those of adjacent ethnicities and cultures in complex ways. Some family names of English etymology—and even Anglo-Norman, as in the case of Sinclair—are distinctively Scottish. There is also quite a lot of overlap between the family names of Scotland and the family names of England—Wilson and Walker, for example, are characteristic of both northern England and Scotland, while Smith is as common in Aberdeenshire as in Kent. In western Scotland, there is overlap between Scottish and Irish clan names. Kennedy is one of many names that are well established on both sides of the Irish Sea. Other names of Gaelic etymology have different conventional anglicized spellings in Scotland and Ireland, for example Docherty and Doherty. In the Highlands and Islands, there was language contact between Norse and Gaelic, with the result, inter alia, that there are Gaelic given names with Norse etymons and vice versa. An example is Sorley (Gaelic Somhairle), which is from the Old Norse personal name Sumarliðr ‘summer warrior’, which in turn was altered by folk etymology in English-language contexts into the family names Summerlad and Summerland. The clan name McLeod (Gaelic Mac Leòid) is based on a Norse byname, Ljótr ‘ugly’. Also, it is not widely known that a P-Celtic (Brittonic) language similar to Welsh was spoken in parts of west central Scotland until about the 14th century. The compiler of a dictionary of Scottish family names, therefore, must have competence in Gaelic, Old Scandinavian, and Welsh, as well as in Anglo-Norman French, Middle English, and, of course, Scots.

The standard work on Scottish surnames is by George Fraser Black (1866–1948). Published in 1946, this was the product of a 40-year-long survey of Scottish historical documents, from which names were assiduously collected by the author, a Scottish American in the service of the New York Public Library. This institution published Black’s dictionary when publication in Britain proved to be impossible due to the war and other difficulties. Black provides an often colourful assortment of historical citations. He tells us, for example, at the entry for the obsolete name Blackbody that there was ‘a prisoner named Blackbodie in Edinburgh Castle, 1687’, and at Ratter that ‘Master Malcolm Rotter, natural son of Sir Andrew Rotar, vicar of Halkirk, was legitimated in 1538.’ A great benefit is that he gives a wealth of detailed source information. Black is particularly informative about the origin of Scottish habitational surnames from baronies and other place-names. His primary aim was historical, not etymological; etymologies are not always given, and when they are, they sometimes contain errors.

Two much smaller works on Scottish surnames which should be mentioned are Dorward (1978), which contains substantial discursive entries, and the specialist study of Shetland surnames by Beattie (2002).

4.1 Family names in Scots-speaking Scotland

The development of hereditary surnames in Scotland was not uniform, with Scots-speaking areas and Gaelic-speaking areas adopting family names at different periods and rates. Hereditary surnames first occurred in Scots-speaking regions at a similar time to their initial use in England, ‘introduced into Scotland through the Normans’ (Black 1946: xiii), with wealthy landholders settling in the country soon after the Norman Conquest, usually with names of toponymic origin. Following this, however, the ‘spread of surnames in Scotland seems to have been slow’ (McKinley 1990: 45). While most landholders seem to have ‘acquired surnames . . . by about 1300’ (McKinley 1990: 45), it seems that ‘the general spread of hereditary surnames was not complete in the Scots-speaking regions until at least the 16th century’ (McKinley 1990: 46). It is not clear what McKinley means by ‘the general spread of hereditary surnames’, but if we take it to mean the adoption of family names by the majority of the Scots-speaking population of Scotland, then the establishment of family names in the country occurred later than in England. A small number of non-hereditary names persisted in remote areas, even as late as the 19th century, as seen in this very late example noted by Black (1946: xxv): ‘Gideon Manson . . . died in Foula [Shetland] in March, 1930. His father’s name was James Manson (Magnus’s son) and his grandfather was called Magnus Robertson.’

The family names of Scots-speaking Scotland can be classified under any of the main types of name also identifiable in England (see section 3.3), suggesting that the same system of naming was in general use in both countries. Accordingly, we find relationship names and locative names aplenty, and occupational names, some of which do not coincide with and are not variants of traditional surnames found also in England (Cadger, Doctor, Mutter (2), Phimister). However, it is noteworthy that some occupational names, with their variants, overlap with what is found in the north of England but not the south (Coulthard, Runciman, Stoddart). As regards nicknames, Black (1946: xxix) notes that ‘contrary to the common view I have found few of our [Scottish] surnames to be derived from nicknames.’ That opinion needs some qualification in the light of, for example, Cruickshank, Meikle, and Swankie.

A notable fact is that some English surnames migrated to Scotland as early as the Middle Ages. A seminal moment for this migration was the normanization of the Scottish bureaucracy by King David I in the early 12th century. David had been brought up at the English court and married the English Countess of Huntingdon. When he unexpectedly succeeded to the throne of Scotland after the deaths of his three elder brothers, he took his retainers north with him and set about restructuring the administration of Scotland, opening the way for a long process of northward migration by ambitious Norman barons, knights, and fortune-seekers with English and Norman French family names. Some of these are recognizable as variants of English place-names (Barclay, Laidlaw, Lindsay, Ramsay), and some surnames of Norman French origin are shared with the English aristocracy and gentry (Bruce, Mowbray, Napier, Wallace). Of course, more generally, since Modern Scots and Modern English both descend from Middle English, it must be recognized that some surnames are found in both countries, differentiated only by the spelling conventions in force at various periods in both languages or by dialect details (Broun/Brown, Millar/Miller, Stewart/Steward) or not differentiated at all.

Many family names of Scots or English structure and appearance are late anglicizations of traditional Gaelic names of relationship in mac ‘son’ (see section 5.3), with -son appearing suffixed to given names of Gaelic origin (Ferguson, Finlayson, Gilkison).

5. Family names in Ireland and Gaelic-speaking Scotland<sup>3</sup>

5.1 The background of Gaelic

The Gaelic language has been spoken in Ireland, where it is now normally known as Irish, from at least the early centuries of the first millennium AD and probably longer. It remains a native language in Ireland, but its use in everyday life is now generally confined to areas along the western seaboard of the country, within districts collectively known as Gaeltachtaí. Despite this retrenchment, it remains an important language of educated culture and national symbolism over the whole island. Scottish Gaelic does not go back so far as a language of Scotland. It was brought by settlers from Ireland, starting in the west of the country in the 4th to 5th centuries AD, reinforced by Christian missions in the 6th century, spreading by the 12th century over most of modern Scotland except the far north-east and the far south-east, and progressively losing ground to Scots and English in modern times.

5.2 Gaelic in Ireland and Scotland

A shared tribe- or clan-based culture and a common literary language still united Gaelic Ireland and Scotland before the Plantations of the 17th century (the settlement of English and Scottish people in Ireland as a matter of government policy formed in Britain). Mutual comprehension of established surnames would not have been difficult in the earlier period. Many similarities can be discerned between the Gaelic names of Ireland and Scotland, and attempting to differentiate between the two often opens the risk of a false distinction. It is the anglicization of Gaelic names which is the key issue in this dictionary, in which all the head forms are given in their most familiar anglicized spellings. Both the phonology and the spelling conventions of both branches of the Gaelic language are very different from those of English, which is one of the underlying reasons why most surnames came to be greatly altered during more than three centuries of English rule in Ireland and during the four centuries since the Union of the Crowns of Scotland and England in 1603.

There is considerable variation in the anglicized surnames of both countries, due in part to local spelling norms (for example the voiceless velar fricative /x/ is spelt ch in Scots but gh in Irish English), and due also to anglicization at different dates. In the older language an ancestor name beginning with a consonant and following Ó or Mac normally had its initial consonant unchanged. However, in the 17th century a new grammatically-based process developed by which the initial consonant of proper names was changed in the possessive (‘genitive’) case. This process of lenition (an extended usage of a much earlier phenomenon) in most cases involves the replacement of a plosive consonant by a related fricative, and is indicated in Gaelic spelling by adding the letter h after the relevant consonant. The operation of this change could result in different anglicizations of the same surname; thus Mac Domhnaill might be anglicized McDonnell in Ireland or

McDonald in Scotland, while the later lenited form Mac Dhomhnaill was anglicized as McConnell or even McGonnell because the sound represented by dh was either not perceived or not recognized by those responsible for recording the name. Other surnames with similar variants are McDonagh and McConaghy (from Mac D[h]onchadha) and McDowell and McCool (from Mac D[h]ubhghaill).

The great range of spelling variation due to such grammatically triggered pronunciation variation can be illustrated by the cognate set McConnachie, Maconochie, McConaghy, McConkey, similar forms lacking Mc-, and McDonough and Donahue (with several other variants of each of the cited forms). A rarer source of variation is accent or dialect difference within the Gaelic continuum; it can be illustrated by Irish McAteer versus Scottish McIntyre, both representing Mac an tSaoir ‘son of the craftsman’; the latter also exhibits English/Scots diphthongization of the vowel in the final syllable.

Many distinctive family names of Gaelic origin are associated with particular regions, for example McAughtrie and McCracken with Galloway in the extreme south-west of Scotland, where an ill-recorded dialect of Gaelic was spoken between, very approximately, 1100 or earlier and 1700; and many are associated with particular Highland clans, each with its own traditional territory.

5.3 Gaelic genealogy and characteristic name-types

Genealogy was an important cultural element in Gaelic society, and individuals, as members of the same family, were generally identified and distinguished by their pedigree and their population group. Lengthy pedigrees were still being deployed in writing to identify individuals as late as the Fiants of the Elizabethan period. Individuals in rural Gaeldom may still be distinguished locally by their father’s or mother’s given name. Identification by patronymics (and extended genealogy) developed out of, and for long co-existed with, this system—Kitty Pheadair Eoghain Ruaidh ‘Red-haired Eoghan’s Peter’s Kitty’ appeared in a Donegal local newspaper as recently as 2015. Hereditary relationship names were formed in Ireland, but not in Scotland, in the late first millennium with Ó ‘grandson, descendant (of)’, and in both Ireland and Scotland from early in the second millennium with Mac ‘son (of)’ (Ó Murchadha 1999) (both types are loosely referred to as patronymics below). Whilst it can be difficult to date the transition from patronymic to inherited surname, the earliest true surname seems to have been Ó Cléirigh ‘grandson of Cléireach’, mentioned in AD 980 in the Annals of Ulster, and this genealogical type became the overwhelmingly dominant type of surname. It will be seen that Gaelic surnames were well established at a relatively early date as compared with England, Scotland, and Wales; Woulfe (1923: 15) claims that ‘Irish surnames came into use gradually from about the middle of the 10th to the end of the 13th century,’ and that that places them among the earliest surnames in Europe. Surnames which were originally formed in these ways can be exemplified by Ó Conaill ‘grandson or descendant of Conall’ and Mac Cárthaigh ‘son of Cárthach’, and these yield the modern anglicized forms

O’Connell and McCarthy, along with several variants.

Patronymics were overwhelmingly based on given names, but also, less frequently, formed on the basis of occupational terms, as in the case of Scottish Mac a’ Ghobhainn, Irish Mac an Ghabhann ‘son of the smith’, yielding McGowan and a range of other anglicized variants, the most frequent of which are recorded in this dictionary.

Names in pedigrees using Ó and Mac + the full extensive range of Gaelic given names were preceded by the emergence of structurally similar given names in maol ‘follower, servant, devotee (especially of a religious figure)’. These given names came to be included in surnames of patronymic origin, but only those using the Ó formula, for example Ó Maoilbhréanainn (modern Mulrennan) from St Brendan. During the initial phase of the surname period, giolla came to be used in a similar way to maol, and hence in surnames using the Mac formula, such as Mac Giolla Mhártain (modern Gilmartin or Martin) from St Martin (MacLysaght 1985: ix; information from Kay Muhr). Some such surnames appear to derive from occupations or statuses, such as Mac Giolla Easpaig ‘son of the servant of the bishop’, but it is more likely that Giolla Easpaig and the like were used as complex given names of the type just mentioned. The same applies in the case of apparent embedded nicknames such as that in Mac Dubhghaill ‘son of Dubhghall’, a close compound meaning ‘dark stranger’, but probably used as a given name rather than a description. These two surnames exist today, respectively as Gillespie (which is sometimes shortened to Espie, especially in America) and McDowell (elsewhere McDougal).

Perhaps as a result of the use of words for personal characteristics in given names, as in the case of Dubhghall ‘dark stranger’, some apparent Gaelic nickname-based surnames were formed, either from the loss of a patronymic prefix or the coining of a new name, seen for example in the modern surnames Bane or Bain, sometimes from bán, bàn ‘white(-haired)’, perhaps a reduction of a given name such as Giolla Bán, and Ogg, sometimes from Scottish Gaelic óg ‘(the) young(er)’, such names are quite rare.

This does not, however, appear to be the main reason for the later reduction in the number of names with patronymic prefixes in Ireland, which ‘were very widely dropped during the period of submergence of Catholic and Gaelic Ireland which began in the early 17th century’ (MacLysaght 1985: x), when English influence in Ireland greatly increased. The intention to submerge native culture was the result of deliberate policy; in 1465 the Irish parliament in Dublin passed an Act to compel every Irishman living in the Anglo-Norman counties of Dublin, Meath, Louth, and Kildare to ‘take to him an English surname of one towne, as Sutton, Chester, Trym, Skryne, Corke, Kinsale; or colour, as white, blacke, browne; or art or science, as smith or carpenter; or office, as cooke, butler’ (Woulfe 1923: xxxi, quoting Edward IV, Statutes at Large, Ireland, vol. I: 29). This seems to have had little effect a century later, but in the longer term the assault on, or attrition of, Irish naming norms was more effective. The wider context of this assault involved the 17th-century Plantation of non-speakers of Irish mentioned above, and the proscription of the language, whether because it was viewed as a hindrance to ‘civilization’ or as a symbol of rebellious or ‘Popish’ intentions. This occurred with different degrees of severity in Ireland and Scotland, but especially in Ireland, starting with the anti-Catholic Penal Laws of 1695: teaching Irish, teaching in it, or even speaking it were made a punishable offence, which had a baleful effect on the way surnames were recorded and transmitted.

During the process of modification of Irish names, Ó was more frequently dropped than Mac, the discrepancy perhaps being due to the fact that Scottish settlers during the Plantation period might also have surnames in Mc-, providing evidence that being called Mc- did not necessarily indicate a potential ‘Irish rebel’.

Anglicization might involve not only removal of such traditional genealogical indications, but also transliteration or rather ‘phonetic’ spelling based on English norms (Sullivan for Ó Súilleabháin), adopting an English surname with a roughly similar sound to the Gaelic (Bartlett for (Mac) Pharthaláin), and translation of the meaning or supposed meaning, e.g. Irish Mac an Ghabhann, Scottish Mac a’ Ghobhainn sometimes anglicized to Smith, and Irish Ó Fuaruisce anglicized to Waters on the basis of the (false) belief that the word uisce ‘water’ appears in it. The development of Irish surnames into their modern forms was often complex, moving through a number of stages illustrating different processes, and sometimes resulting in more than one name, as MacLysaght (1985: xii) shows in his discussion of Abraham as an Irish surname:

Of course that is Jewish elsewhere, but in Ireland it is the modern corrupt or distorted form of an ancient Gaelic surname, Mac an Bhreitheamhan (son of the judge). It was first anglicized MacEbrehowne, etc. which was shortened to MacEbrehan and MacAbrehan, later MacAbraham and so to Abraham. Other anglicized forms of this name are Breheny and Judge.

The patronymic prefixes Mac and Ó later re-emerged strongly in Irish surnames. MacLysaght (1985: x) suggests this began in the late 19th century as a result of a ‘revival of national consciousness’, comparable with that seen in Wales, as shown in the steady increase of people adopting the O’ in the name O’Sullivan from 1866 to 1944. (The use of the apostrophe has no linguistic purpose, is relatively recent, and was heavily criticized, though still is generally adopted.) Similarly, Yurdan (1990: 3) notes that ‘during the renaissance of interest in things Irish during the period 1930–60, the ‘O’s and ‘Macs’ were reinstated to their former positions.’ Many Irish people, not necessarily native Irish speakers, now use authentic Irish-language spellings of their originally patronymic surnames, replacing anglicizations, for example Ó Súilleabháin (male bearers) and Ní (‘daughter [of]’) Shúilleabháin (female bearers) for O’Sullivan and Mac Diarmada (male) and Nic Dhiarmada (female) for McDermott.

Scottish Gaelic surnames in other categories are found, but these are of uncertain age and sometimes potentially misleading. We find, for example, Moggach as a nickname from mùgach ‘surly’, and the occupational surname Clacher, apparently from clachaire ‘stonemason’, which may well, however, be a reduced form of the patronymic Mac a’ Chlachaire ‘son of the stonemason’.

There are also toponymic surnames in Ireland, but these are not usually Irish in origin; they ‘have been adopted from [the names of] estates held by the Anglo-Norman nobility in both Ireland and mainland Britain’ (Yurdan 1990: 2). This category is represented, for example, by Clare and Pembroke in England and Wales respectively; Nicholas de Trym, recorded in 1336 in Downpatrick (County Down), has a toponymic surname clearly derived from an Irish place (Trim, County Meath), but this surname and others like it, with rare exceptions such as Dromgoole, seem not to have survived in Ireland.

5.4 Literature on Gaelic names

Irish genealogies, written down both before and after the adoption of surnames, record the personal names of thousands of individuals. Some of the earliest manuscripts containing genealogical material were edited and indexed by Michael O’Brien (1962, with an introduction in 1976), who published further notes on the forms of personal names and their linguistic elements. A 17th-century collection, The Great Book of Irish Genealogies, has been edited in several volumes by Nollaig Ó Muraile (2003). Patrick Woulfe’s pioneering study of Irish surnames (Woulfe 1923) also attempted to give the meaning of the given names from which they are derived. Part I gives the Irish Gaelic form of English and anglicized names, e.g. Kevin – Caoimhghín; Hickey – Ó hÍceadha or Ó hÍcidhe. Part II gives etymological and historical explanations (in English) of Irish given names and surnames. Building on Woulfe’s efforts, the historian Edward MacLysaght (1887–1986), who among many other official duties served as Chief Herald for the Irish Office of Arms, published a series of books on Irish families, culminating in a succinct but authoritative dictionary of surnames (MacLysaght 1957, 1985), whose modest dimensions belie its coverage and importance. However, neither Woulfe’s nor MacLysaght’s dictionary includes examples of early bearers illustrating the development of Irish family names.

MacLysaght’s dictionary has entries for more than 4,000 family names, covering all the most important and frequent Irish surnames. These are of Gaelic, Norman, and sometimes English or Welsh etymology. de Bhulbh (1997) contains an updated name-list in both Irish and English, with locations, modern Irish spellings, and cross-reference to MacLysaght’s publications.

MacLysaght’s work in Irish etymology was later supplemented by two leading Irish scholars: Tomás de Bhaldraithe, responsible for the Irish entries in Hanks and Hodges (1988), and Kay Muhr, likewise in Hanks (2003a). Even when the etymological information is basically the same as in MacLysaght’s dictionary, these more recent works give explanations in less specialized language. The best currently available general book on Irish given names and their etymologies is Ó Corráin and Maguire (1981), although it covers only a small fraction of Irish given names.

Other works on Irish family names should be mentioned here: Bell (1988) is a very readable work, which explains the history of some Ulster families as well as the etymology of their names; and especially Mitchell (1992 on the surnames of Derry, and 2010 on those of north-west Ireland more widely).

6. Manx family names

In the 5th century the Isle of Man was settled by Gaelic-speaking people from Ireland, and although the island was subsequently ruled by Norwegian Vikings from the 9th century, by Scottish kings from the 13th century, and by English overlords from the 14th century, the core body of indigenous Manx surnames is fundamentally Gaelic and Irish in character (see section 5). This took the form of a patronymic system in which a grandfather's given name was prefixed with Ó or a father's given name with Mac. Most of the given names in surviving surnames are Gaelic (specifically in Manx, a dialect of Old Irish), but some are Old Scandinavian, arising from the intermarriage of Vikings (based in Dublin) with Irish and Manx, and some are Norman French, following the Norman invasion of Ireland in the 12th century. The Viking and Norman names were adapted to Manx dialect.

Some surnames of this type were already becoming hereditary by the end of the 10th century. By the 16th century most of those with Ó had lost the prefix and names with Mac were increasingly reduced to the final consonant of Mac + the given name, giving rise to a number of uniquely Manx surnames like Kermode (Manx Mac Dhiarmada 'son of Diarmaid') and Quirk (Manx Mac Cuirc, 'son of Corc'), where the personal names are Gaelic. Viking personal names are found in Casement (Manx Mac Asmund 'son of Asmund', from the Old Scandinavian personal name Ásmundr) and Corkill (Manx Mac Thorcaill 'son of Thorkell', from the Old Scandinavian personal name Porketill). Norman French personal names occur in Clucas (Manx Mac Lugaish 'son of Lucas', from the scriptural name Luke), and Crebbin (Manx Mac Robyn 'son of Robin', a pet form of Old French Robert). The Normanno-Manx surnames were sometimes translations into Manx of Norman surnames beginning in Old French Fitz 'son'. For example, Cubbon (Manx Mac Giobuin 'son of Gibbon', a pet form of Old French Gilbert) represents Norman French Fitzgibbon. In a small number of cases the name is based on an occupational term rather than a given name, as in Teare (Manx Mac y Teyir 'son of the craftsman'). In this instance, as in many others, Mac has been dropped altogether.

Some family names with a long history in Man are of a non-Gaelic formation, and descend from late medieval and post-medieval immigrants, especially from England. In 1405 John Stanley, a Lancashire magnate, was granted the Kingdom (or Lordship) of Man by Henry IV, and it was partly through the patronage of his descendants (the Earls of Derby) that the Isle of Man was further peopled by families from north-west England, mostly with English locative surnames. Examples include Seddon, which is first recorded on Man in 1580 and was still there in the 1881 Census, but most of the English locative surnames on the island in 1881 first appeared there in the late 18th and 19th centuries. There was at that time an even greater flow of Manxmen to north-west England. In Archer's mapping of 1881 Census surnames, Manx names like Quirk and Quayle have a secondary epicentre in and around Liverpool, and outliers in the coal, iron, and steel ports of Whitehaven (Cumberland) and Barrow-in-Furness (Lancashire).

7. Welsh family names

In 2011, Wales had a population of just over three million, 562,000 of whom declared themselves able to speak Welsh, the Brittonic Celtic language descended from that of the inhabitants of Britain in the pre-Roman Iron Age. Some 780 current family names have a modern distribution with a strong component in Wales. Most of them are relationship names that became fixed family names only in the 18th or 19th century, drawing for the most part on male given names that were current at that time in Wales. That stock of given names included some native Welsh names (like Morgan and Rees, an anglicized form of Rhys), but it was dominated by a large number of common names first introduced to Wales by the Normans and which later became hugely popular in both Wales and neighbouring England (William, Richard, John, Thomas, and so on). In addition, the 18th- and 19th-century name stock included many Old Testament names, reflecting the desire of Puritans and later Nonconformist Protestants to identify themselves as God's chosen people, the 'New Israel'. In south Wales and to a lesser extent in north Wales, this gave rise to surnames like Enoch, Israel, Jeremiah, Mordecai, Samuel, and Zacharias. Although they look Jewish (and sometimes are so in centres of Jewish immigration in Britain), in Wales they are Nonconformist family names, especially those of Baptists and Independents (Rowlands and Rowlands 1996: 167).

The pattern of development of hereditary surnames in Wales was thus very different from the English pattern discussed in section 3.4. Norman lords acquired land in Wales soon after the Conquest, but neither their use of surnames, nor that by subsequent English settlers, had much impact on local usage (McKinley 1990: 41). As late as 1500, hereditary family names were rare in Wales, with the Welsh patronymic system being by far the most common method of differentiating individuals. This involved attaching the given name of (normally) the father to a person's own given name. It used Welsh mab 'son' to create names of the form 'X mab Y'. The word mab was expressed, for grammatical reasons, in the lenited form fab, pronounced [vab], which was subsequently reduced to ab in names. Ab is the usual form before names with initial vowels, and ap before those with initial consonants, resulting in 'Madog ab Owain' but 'Madog ap Rhydderch', although a minority of recorded names do not conform to this phonological rule. This patronymic method was still current among Welsh speakers in the 18th and 19th centuries, when fixed family names were being adopted at all social levels, so alongside the English type of family name such as Edwards can be found wholly Welsh surnames like Bevan, from ap Iefan 'son of Evan', and Prothero, from ap Rhydderch 'son of Rhydderch'. Non-Welsh given names could be treated in the same way among Welsh speakers, and we find both ap Humphrey (giving modern Pumfrey and variants), and also, based on a form where /h/ was not pronounced, ab Umphrey (modern Boumphrey and variants).

The late development of fixed family names in Wales needs to be borne in mind when interpreting the recorded evidence for Welsh surnames. It is unlikely that medieval names using the formula with (m)ab were ever hereditary, because they were descriptive names (bynames) directly identifying the father of the bearer. Not until the mid-16th century did ‘the change to settled surnames begin to filter through different levels of society’ (Rowlands and Rowlands 1996: 25), and it was a slow process that did not reach most ordinary families for another two centuries. The use of English expanded through Wales in the wake of its incorporation into the administrative structures of England by the Laws in Wales Acts of 1535 and 1542. A consequence of this was the widespread abandonment in official records of the Welsh patronymic formula and its replacement by an English type of surname (frequently not hereditary until the 19th century) based either on given names that were themselves of an English structure and based on English renderings of Welsh given names (such as Maddock and Owen) or on given names in use in England and Wales, whatever their origin (William, Humphrey, Enoch, etc.). The predominant formula was the use of the given name with a suffixed, originally but no longer patronymic, -s. Jones (from John) and Williams are typically (but not exclusively) Welsh, and are—or were—especially prevalent in counties near the English border, as well as in English border counties such as Herefordshire and Shropshire. The vast majority of such names are derived from male names, but female ones are evidenced by Ankrett from Angharad and Wantling from Gwenllian. Occasionally, family names are found based on given names in their Welsh forms, as with Gruffydd for Griffith and Tomos for Thomas. Pet forms of native Welsh given names occasionally appear in surnames; Beddow is apparently a pet form of Mareddud, anglicized as Meredith.

The English family naming system did not entirely supplant the native one; we find Howells (from Welsh Hywel + -s) co-existing with Powell, an anglicized form of the originally patronymic ap Hywel, but used as a true inherited surname in the English fashion. Sometimes the Welsh given name itself survives as a family name without suffixation, as with Cadwallader, Craddock, and Llewellyn.

The original patronymic system appears to have been retained in parallel in some more remote areas, with names in ap occurring as late as the 18th century ‘in upland Glamorgan parishes and in western Monmouthshire’ (Rowlands and Rowlands 1996: 25–6) and also in north and west Wales. Some people of Welsh heritage today bear true family names of the type ‘X ap Y’, but many, if not most, of these seem to have arisen as a modern patriotic expression of pride in ancestry and of the national historical awareness which also generated efforts to halt the decline of Welsh speaking (Rowlands and Rowlands 1996: 34).

Welsh family names other than relationship names are almost unknown. Locative family names can occasionally be found (examples are Conway, Kenefick, and Laugharne; others, found outside Wales, such as Neath, may be extinct). Nicknames are rare: Landeg, a lenited form of glandeg ‘handsome’ where not from a place-name Llandeg, and Pingree from pengrych ‘curly-headed’; however, Vaughan, from a lenited form of bychan ‘small’, is much more common, as is Gough, from a lenited form of coch ‘red(-haired)’. No convincing example of an occupational family name deriving from Welsh has been found. One might have expected names based on gof ‘smith’ or bugail ‘shepherd’, but since such concepts used in names would mainly have been recorded within the English administrative system, the Welsh terms are absent from family names.

Analysis of the Welsh names in this dictionary has been greatly aided by the work of Morgan and Morgan (1985) and Rowlands and Rowlands (1996, second edition 2013). The latter is not only a very useful and reliable guide to the history of Welsh surnaming practices but contains a dictionary of characteristically Welsh surnames with interpretations supported by sound biographical and genealogical evidence and distributional maps.

8. Cornish family names

In the 2011 census the total population of the county of Cornwall was 532,300. Many of these people are comparatively recent incomers from elsewhere in Britain. The indigenous language of the county was Cornish, a Brittonic language closely related to Welsh and Breton. The Cornish language died out in the 18th century, but in the 20th century strenuous efforts with nationalist overtones began to be made to revive it, and in the 2011 census 557 people claimed Cornish as their main language. This dictionary contains approximately 200 main entries that are classified as Cornish, with a similar number of variant spellings. The category ‘Cornish’ here denotes family names that have an etymology in the Cornish language, together with a smaller number that are derived from place-names that are unique to Cornwall, whether of Cornish-language origin or not. These Cornish-language family names are found mainly in west Cornwall, for east Cornwall has been English-speaking since 1300 or earlier.

Most family names classified as Cornish do not appear in the documentary record till after 1500 or so. The great majority derive from place-names in Cornwall, most often the names of farms or hamlets. Many such place-names occur more than once, and it can be a difficult matter to allocate a family name to a place even where the etymology of the name is known and the places successfully identified. Even where a family name and a place can be linked, many place-names still defy reliable interpretation. Occasional names in other categories may be found: relational names (Clemo, Edyvean, Varcoe), occupational names (Angove, Tyack), and nicknames (Angwyn, Annear). The latter two categories are notably rare.

Such progress as has been made in identifying the origins of Cornish family names is due to G. Pawley White’s Handbook of Cornish surnames (second edition 1981) and to O. J. Padel’s painstaking work as a consultant for this dictionary and previously for Hanks and Hodges (1988). Padel’s work (1985) on Cornish place-names has also proved highly valuable, as have works on family names by Deacon and others (2004) and Fox and Padel (2000).

9. Family names in the Channel Islands

The Channel Islands consist of a group of islands and islets in the Gulf of Saint Malo. They are organized into two bailiwicks, or territories, which are named after the two largest islands, Jersey and Guernsey. They are not formally part of the United Kingdom, but are governed by the British monarch under the title of the Duke of Normandy, a relic of the situation prior to 1204, when the islands did indeed form part of the Duchy of Normandy, the rest of which was absorbed by the kingdom of France in that year.

The native everyday language of the islands until the mid-20th century was the Norman dialect of French, referred to in this dictionary as Channel Islands French. English speakers began to immigrate in numbers in the later 19th century, and the dialect was progressively lost during the 20th century, the evacuation of children to England during the German occupation (1940–5) being a decisive factor. Very few native speakers now remain, the exact number being disputed but indisputably a very small number—a few hundred elderly people on each main island. The native family names of the islands are, however, all formations in Channel Islands French dialect, which never had a standard form. Some are more characteristic of one bailiwick than the other (Falla and Ferbrache are typical of Guernsey; Huart and Queere of Jersey), and some differ dialectally from island to island or even from parish to parish, e.g. Le Mesurier (typically in Guernsey) versus Le Masurier (typically in Jersey, especially the south-western parishes). The dialectal names are often recorded in a form influenced by standard French, which was the formal administrative language of the islands until relatively recently. Thus, Le Masurier represents a partially Frenchified form of what could be rendered Lé Masuth(i)eux.

10. Huguenot and Walloon family names in Britain and Ireland

Some 500 entries in this dictionary are classified as Huguenot. These are family names of French origin that were brought to England by Protestant refugees in the 16th and 17th centuries. In this section of the introduction, we first discuss the origin and meaning of the term Huguenot, then the circumstances that caused the Huguenots to flee to England and elsewhere. We go on to summarize the related phenomenon of emigration from Wallonia (what is now southern Belgium) in the Spanish Netherlands. In some places in England, Huguenots and Protestant Walloons shared the same churches for worship and evidently regarded themselves as part of the same community.

The word Huguenot is widely believed to be an altered form of the Swiss German term Eidgenosse, meaning ‘confederate’, literally ‘oath fellow’, i.e. a member of a group who had sworn an oath of fellowship. Eidgenosse is recorded in German-speaking Switzerland as early as the 14th century, when it was used to denote the leaders of the confederacy that was to become Switzerland (<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Eidgenossenschaft>). The term Huguenot is first recorded (in the form ayguenot) in the Registers of the Geneva City Council in 1526. It is sometimes asserted that the spelling beginning with Hugue- is a punning reference to Besançon Hugues (1487–1532), a citizen of Geneva who was a leader of the rebellion against the House of Savoy in 1525–6, an event that paved the way for Geneva to join the Swiss Confederation. However, like many other hypotheses about the etymology of the term, it is convoluted and not fully convincing: Hugues was scarcely a thoroughgoing Protestant, and in his later years he may even have plotted a Catholic restoration to the Geneva bishopric. If his name is truly involved, it must be because of his anti-Savoy political activities, not his religious views, and the term must originally have amounted to ‘rebel’. In the course of the 16th century the term came to denote the followers of the radical French theologian Jean Calvin (1509–64), who was based in Geneva.

Calvin was one of several influential Protestant reformers who broke with Rome over theological and moral issues. In 1541 the city council in Geneva invited him to establish a ministry there. Calvinism spread rapidly, especially in southern and central France. It is estimated that by 1562 there were over two million Huguenots. In that year, the first of several massacres of Huguenots took place in the small town of Wassy in central France. This led to a period of communal violence and persecution of Protestants, which continued until 1598. Then, King Henry IV of France, seeking to unify his nation, granted major concessions to Protestants, bringing an end (for a time) to the worst of the strife. This was done in a royal proclamation known as the Edict of Nantes, which, among other things, granted freedom of conscience and civil rights to Protestants. However, hostilities between Catholics and Huguenots continued to simmer, both overtly and beneath the surface. Huguenots in La Rochelle even began to conduct their own foreign policy, in defiance of the king. The Protestants did not endear themselves to their fellow countrymen by their constant insistence on doctrinal righteousness and the evils of the Church of Rome, while innumerable provocations were committed by both sides. In 1661 300 Huguenot families were expelled from La Rochelle; many of them fled to England. Matters came to a head in 1685, when Louis XIV, the ‘Sun King’, revoked the Edict of Nantes. It now became illegal to hold a Protestant religious service anywhere in France and legal to hunt down and kill Protestants and their families if they persisted in a refusal to convert to Roman Catholicism. As a result, hundreds of thousands of French Huguenots fled from their homes, not only to England but also to Protestant realms all over Europe and, in some cases, thence to colonial North America. Other Huguenot families went to the newly independent Netherlands, which had finally shaken off Spanish rule, and from there some of them—Dutch-speaking families bearing French family names such as Du Plessis and De Villiers—went on to found dynasties in South Africa. Others made their way to Scandinavia or to Protestant principalities in Germany and the Palatinate. The British authorities encouraged Huguenot settlement in Ireland, partly (at least) with a view to offsetting Roman Catholic influence. According to a report published in 1688, three years after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, over 13,000 French refugees had already settled in London, many of them in Spitalfields and adjoining areas of the East End. Among them were skilled weavers from Lyons and Tours, and the area rapidly became a thriving centre of silk weaving. An overview of Huguenot settlements in Britain and Ireland can be found in chapter 2 of Robin Gwynn’s book Huguenot Heritage.

A related and slightly earlier source of French family names in England was the migration of Protestant refugees in the 16th and 17th centuries from the region known as Wallonia. In the 16th century, the territory that now comprises the Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, and some adjacent parts of France and Germany was ruled by Catholic Spain as ‘a united and indivisible Habsburg dominion’. In 1579 the United Provinces in the northern part of the Spanish Netherlands declared independence, which led to an eighty-year war, culminating in the establishment of the Netherlands as a modern (largely Protestant) state.

Spanish rule was harsh and intolerant. There was no room for freedom of conscience. Nevertheless, Protestantism (at first Lutheran, but subsequently Calvinist) became increasingly widespread, especially among French-speaking inhabitants of Wallonia (the southern part of the region). In 1567 oppression by the Catholic (Spanish) authorities triggered the first wave of migration from Wallonia to England. The refugees built churches in several places, including London, Canterbury, Norwich, and Bristol. There were Walloons (designated as ‘strangers’) in Canterbury at least as early as 1581, and records of the Canterbury Walloon church show that by 1634 it had a congregation of some 900 members. When Huguenot refugees arrived in such places they were able to join an already existing Walloon church. (Walloon family names can rarely be distinguished from other French names; for this, genealogical research is needed.)

The Dutch settlers of New Netherland in North America (especially in the Hudson Valley) included many Huguenot families. The colonial authorities in British North America also encouraged settlement by Huguenots and other Protestant groups, while discouraging Roman Catholics.

Several Huguenot names in Britain and Ireland, for example Laval and Morel, are duplicates of French polygenetic family names that had already been brought to England from France by the Normans several centuries earlier. Some of these names had persisted in England but others died out between the 12th and 16th centuries and were reintroduced by the Huguenots and Walloons. Others, however, are quite distinct from Norman and other French family names. To a greater or lesser extent, many Huguenot family names in England, such as Garrick (from French garrique ‘grove of holm oaks’), have undergone a process of anglicization; others, such as Gautier (from a personal name, equivalent of English and German Walter), retain their original French spelling, while there are those like Prevost and Prevo that are found in both French and anglicized forms.

The main sources of information about early bearers of Huguenot and Walloon names in England are the records of Huguenot and Walloon churches. Two societies, the Huguenot Society in London and the National Huguenot Society in San Antonio, Texas, collect and disseminate information about Huguenot ancestors.

11. Jewish family names in Britain and Ireland<sup>4</sup>

According to the 2011 census, there were in that year 263,346 people in Britain who classified themselves as Jewish. FaNBI records and explains over 1,000 Jewish family names. Clearly, many Jewish family names in Britain are polygenetic, that is, they originated in several different families independently. In this section of the introduction, we briefly summarize the history of Jews and Judaism in Britain, and then go on to discuss the typology of Jewish family names.

11.1 Ashkenazim and Sephardim

Historically, two main groups of English Jews must be recognized: Sephardim, whose ancestral roots lie in the Iberian Peninsula and countries around the Mediterranean from North Africa to Turkey, some of whom have appeared in England at several points from medieval times onwards; and Ashkenazim, most of whom came to Britain in the 19th and 20th centuries from central and eastern Europe.

The word Sephardim is from Hebrew Sepharad, the name of a country mentioned once in the Bible:

The exiles from Jerusalem who are in Sepharad will possess the cities of the south [generally taken as a reference to the Negev desert in modern Israel, though other suggestions have been made]. (Obadiah 1:20)

For some reason, the land of Sepharad was identified in Jewish folklore with Spain.

Ashkenaz is the name of a descendant of Noah (Genesis 10:3), but the origin of the modern sense seems to be a reference to the Book of Jeremiah (51:27):

Set ye up a standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her [i.e. Babylon], call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz; appoint a captain against her; cause the horses to come up as rough caterpillars.

Oriental Jews, coming mainly from Arabic-speaking countries such as Iraq (notably Baghdad) are sometimes classified separately as Mizrachi, from the Hebrew word mizrach ‘east’, although sometimes regarded as a subgroup of Sephardim. Examples of oriental Jewish family names in England are Habib, Haddad, Hasson, Saatchi, and Sassoon. A few names of Turkish origin were acquired by Jews in the Ottoman Empire: Aslan ‘lion’ (also found as a Jewish male given name), Hanci ‘innkeeper’, Karakas ‘having black eyebrows’, Kucuk ‘small’, though names in this category are more typical of Turkish communities, especially Turkish Cypriots.

11.2 Jewish languages in Europe

For at least three millennia Jews have written (and spoken for liturgical purposes) their ancient traditional Semitic language, Biblical Hebrew. Modern Hebrew is a 20th-century Israeli reconstruction of this language, adapted to modern conditions. In their diaspora over two millennia, Jews adopted the languages of the communities among whom they lived. Sephardim in Iberia adopted Castilian, Catalan, and Portuguese, creating from Castilian Spanish a recognizably distinct Jewish dialect called Ladino or Judeo-Spanish. After the expulsion of the Jews from Spain in the late 15th century, this dialect found a later home in the Ottoman Empire and, in modern times, present-day Israel. It has had no official status in any country in medieval or modern times.

Ashkenazim in Germany adopted Middle High German, from which eventually emerged an equally distinct Jewish dialect called Yiddish. Yiddish spread throughout those areas of eastern Europe where Jewish populations had migrated, and was locally influenced by the other languages of the region, for example Polish, Ukrainian, Russian, Lithuanian, and Hungarian, resulting in a dialectologically rich and complex pattern (Katz 1988). It should be noted that there is little evidence in Britain and Ireland for the rendering of German Jewish names in a transliterated-Yiddish or phonetic fashion, such as can be seen in America in cases like Vaynberg for Weinberg. Such names are almost always recorded in the bureaucratic Standard German fashion.

11.3 History of Jews in England, Scotland, and Ireland

11.3.1 FROM EXPULSION TO EMANCIPATION

Jewish families first came to England shortly after the Norman Conquest. However, in 1290 King Edward I expelled the Jews, and they were not officially allowed to reside in England until 1656. For this and other reasons, medieval Jewry is not strictly relevant to the history of Jewish names in Britain. Nevertheless, a brief historical summary may be of interest and shed some light on the later history of the Jewish community.

William the Conqueror brought Jewish financiers from Rouen to help him collect taxes and run the economy of feudal England. For about 200 years, Jews in England lived in relative peace and prosperity, despite some unusual constraints such as being regarded as the personal property of the king. Throughout this period, successive kings who ran short of money resorted (among other stratagems) to taxing Jews arbitrarily. There is evidence in this period of Jewish urban communities with their own rabbis, courts, and educational system. The chief rabbi, based in London, was designated as a ‘presbyter’ and in this office served not only as a spiritual guide within his own community but also from time to time as an adviser to the king.

Many English Jews in those days and subsequently were financiers on a large or small scale (i.e. moneylenders), for the simple reason that Christians were strictly forbidden by the Church to lend money for interest, which was regarded as sinful. This did not stop Christians borrowing money from Jews, however, nor did it stop them becoming resentful over being required to pay back with interest the money that they had borrowed. Resentment in turn led to racial intolerance and fantasies and rumours about Jews and Jewish practices. A classic example is the lurid and implausible horror story told in The Canterbury Tales by the prioress, a story that had been in circulation in various forms for over a hundred years by the time Chaucer got hold of it. Little High of Lincoln, a nine-year-old boy, was rumoured to have been murdered by Jews and his body thrown down a well. This was only one of many ‘blood libels’, lurid fictions blaming Jews for all sorts of gruesome (and fictitious) deeds. These ‘blood libels’ have always been hard to prove false, partly because negative evidence is always hard to find and partly because anti-Semites throughout the ages have always been willing to believe them regardless of the absence of any credible evidence.

Ignorance and persecution continued to rise, while successive kings imposed arbitrary and (often) financially crippling taxes on Jews. The intercommunal situation continued to deteriorate until, in 1275, King Edward I issued the ‘Statute of the Jewry’, banning the practice of usury altogether. In the words of Joseph Jacobs (1906: 166), former president of the Jewish Historical Society, ‘By depriving the Jews of a resort to usury, Edward was practically preventing them from earning a living at all’. Moneylending continued unabated sub rosa until, in a further piece of self-destructive legislation, Edward had the Jews expelled from England in 1290. It is estimated that between 4,000 and 16,000 Jews were expelled. They went to countries such as Poland, where the rights of Jews were protected by law, and to various cities of central Europe where Jewish communities were already established.

In the middle of the 17th century, a small delegation of Sephardic Jews, including Rabbi Menasseh ben Israel (1604–57), came to London from Amsterdam and, with the support of some Puritan parliamentarians and clergymen, petitioned Parliament for the repeal of Edward I’s expulsion order. The plea was successful and in 1656 Jews were once again officially allowed to reside in England, although in fact a small number of Jewish families were probably already living there unofficially under the guise of Spanish or Dutch nationality.

Among the first families to take advantage of the new situation in Britain were a number of Marranos (Jews from Portugal and Spain who had suffered from the attentions of the Inquisition and been forcibly converted to Christianity), who brought their family names with them. Sephardim, unlike the Ashkenazim of further north (central and eastern Europe), were already using hereditary family names, like non-Jews in the relevant countries.

Jews had been expelled from Spain in 1492, while others were forcibly converted to Christianity and allowed to stay; many of these families continued to observe Jewish rites secretly. Many fled from their homes in mainland Spain to North Africa, the Ottoman Empire, and elsewhere. Others went to Spanish and Portuguese offshore territories, including Madeira, in the hope of escaping the notice of the Inquisition. Many Jewish families went to Portugal, where they enjoyed a brief respite before being officially classed as slaves and having their wealth appropriated by the Catholic authorities. Despite this, many of these families stayed in Portugal, no doubt because they had nowhere else to go or no means of getting there. This explains why many Sephardic families in Britain bear Portuguese names such as Carvalho, Da Costa, Da Silva, and Peixoto. The Marranos were among the earliest members of the Jewish diaspora communities to adopt hereditary family names, often taking the name of the city or village from which they had come, for example Belmonte, Fonseca, and Mendoza. Others bore traditional Jewish patronymic family names, sometimes anglicized, for example Isaacs and Israel.

In 17th-century London the immigrant Marranos established a highly successful community of bankers and merchants, which continued to thrive into the 18th century and beyond, paving the way for the successful integration into 19th-century English society of Ashkenazic bankers and businessmen. The Bevis Marks Synagogue in the City of London, an important repository of Jewish historical records, was built in 1702. Sephardic Jews also came to other cities in England in the 17th and 18th centuries, while it is at about this time, too, that the earliest reliable records are found of Jewish families in Scotland.

In Ireland, Jewish families are first recorded in 1496, when a group of Marrano exiles settled on the south coast. A descendant of one of them, William Annyas, was elected as mayor of Youghal in County Cork in 1555, and his son Francis succeeded him, being elected three times, in 1569, 1576, and 1581. Ireland's first synagogue was founded in 1660, near Dublin Castle. In 1746 a bill was introduced in the Irish House of Commons 'for naturalizing persons professing the Jewish religion in Ireland'.

Ashkenazic immigrants to Britain from central Europe started arriving in significant numbers somewhat later. Jewish families in central Europe experienced extremes of wealth and poverty, success and deprivation. Some of them came to England to pursue their business interests; many others came as impoverished refugees. Some exceptionally rich and gifted Jewish individuals came to England from central Europe in the 18th and 19th centuries. Among them was Nathan Mayer Rothschild (1777–1836), one of five sons of Meyer Amschel Rothschild (1744–1812), a Jewish banker and businessman in Frankfurt am Main. The five Rothschild sons established an international banking empire with centres in Frankfurt, Paris, London, Vienna, and Naples. Jews played an important part not only in the financial and business world but also in the political life of Britain from the 18th century, but they were discriminated against. Nathan's son Lionel was the first Jew elected to Parliament; he won an election in 1847. However, he was not able to attend Parliament as an elected member until 1858, when after much debate in the House of Lords and after winning two further elections for the same seat (the City of London), he was finally allowed to take his seat, substituting in his oath of office the phrase 'so help me Jehovah' for words that required MPs to swear an oath 'upon the true faith of a Christian'. A few years earlier, in 1835, David Salomons (1797–1873), the son of a rich Jewish businessman, had been elected as Sheriff of the City of London. Like Lionel de Rothschild, Salomons had to wage a battle against the specifically Christian wording of the oath of office, but in his case the wording was changed within a year and he was able to take up his post. Subsequently Salomons was elected as an alderman of the City of London and a similar battle over the oath of office ensued, which he likewise eventually won. In 1851 he stood for Parliament and was elected MP for Greenwich, but, like Rothschild, he was not able to take his seat until 1858. (In 1855, while his status as an MP was being disputed, he was elected Lord Mayor of London.)

Other influential British Jews of this period include the wealthy banker and philanthropist Sir Moses Haim Montefiore (1784–1885), who was of Italian origin. His nephew Joseph Sebag-Montefiore (1822–1903) established an important dynasty in England. At the top end of the social scale, then, the history of Judaism in Britain in the 19th century is one of a battle for emancipation, ultimately successful, resulting in integration of at least the rich and powerful Jewish families into the upper echelons of British society.

During the famine years in Ireland, between 1840 and 1852, rich British Jewish families such as the Rothschilds contributed with notable generosity to famine-relief schemes, while many rich landowners in the Protestant ascendancy failed to do so. Daniel O'Connell commented in 1846: 'Ireland . . . is the only country that I know of unsullied by any one act of persecution of the Jews.'

11.3.2 JEWISH IMMIGRATION TO BRITAIN AND IRELAND IN THE 19TH AND 20TH CENTURIES

The Jewish population of Britain and Ireland was greatly increased during the 19th century by large numbers of Ashkenazic refugees from central and eastern Europe, many of them fleeing from anti-Semitic persecution. It is these immigrants and their descendants whose names constitute the majority of the Jewish surnames in this dictionary.

In 1787 the Austrian emperor Joseph II had issued a decree requiring Jews to adopt family names of German etymology, replacing (or rather, in addition to) the patronymic and metronymic system that was in use in Jewish communities prior to that date. Prussia did the same shortly afterwards. Other German states and principalities passed similar laws during the first half of the 19th century. A French law of 1808 required all subjects of the French empire west of the Rhine to register a surname. In the 19th century, family names were imposed on Jewish families in the Russian Empire and elsewhere in Eastern Europe.

Jewish immigration from central and eastern Europe continued, increasing steadily until the First World War. By a cruel irony, the family names that had been imposed on an often reluctant Jewish populace in German-speaking states in the 19th century led to mob violence against Jewish shopkeepers in London and elsewhere, due to the ignorant suspicion that anyone with a German-sounding surname must be an enemy alien. Equally ironic is the fact that during the Second World War refugees from Nazi persecution in Germany who had managed to get to England were interned as 'enemy aliens'. Overcoming innumerable bureaucratic and other obstacles, many thousands of European Jews made it to a new life in the British Isles.

11.4 Typology of Jewish family names

11.4.1 JEWISH RELATIONSHIP NAMES

Many Jewish family names, both Ashkenazic and Sephardic, are derived from the given names of Biblical personages. The picture in countries such as England is slightly confused because such names were also adopted among certain groups of Gentiles, especially Puritans and other Low-Church Christians, who wanted to share the distinction of being God's chosen people. An example is the typically Welsh use of certain Old Testament names (see section 7). As a result, several clusters of personal names in Yiddish, English, and other European languages, not to mention Arabic and other oriental languages, are based on Biblical personal names such as Abraham and his successors Isaac and Jacob (the latter also being known as Israel).

Equally important as sources of Jewish family names are later Biblical figures such as Joseph, Moses, David, and Solomon. Moses was exceptionally common as a personal name, given the role of the historical Moses in the founding of the Jewish kingdom, with forms ranging from Yiddish Moishe to Arabic Musa. Ashkenazic families coming to Britain sometimes kept

Moses, but more often they adopted as an equivalent any of a variety of existing English family names beginning with M-, including Morris and Montague.

The Biblical stories of King David and his son Solomon captured the imagination of generations of Jews and Gentiles (including Muslims) in Britain, Europe, the Middle East, and further afield. In all of these regions, derivatives of David and Solomon are found as both given names and family names. In central and eastern Europe David is regarded as a characteristically Jewish given name, but in Britain it is equally non-Jewish, not least because of the influence of Welsh saints and Scottish kings who bore the name David. The well-established British Gentile family names Davis and Davidson are also found in Britain as Jewish names; they were sometimes adopted for eastern European equivalents such as Davidoff.

In the Jewish European communities of the 18th and 19th centuries, when surnames were made compulsory, many personal names came to be used as family names. These personal names were of both Hebrew and Yiddish origin. Lieberman and Lipman are typically Yiddish family names derived from a male personal name, widespread in the Yiddish communities of central Europe, with the meaning ‘dear man’; Lieberman has a masculine adjective inflection, Lipman does not. Other such names deriving from male given names or nicknames include Grossman ‘big man’ and Gutfreund ‘good friend’.

Judaism is in large part a matriarchal society, with the result that many Jewish family names have a metronymic origin. Balcon and Balkin, for example, are Ashkenazic family names from a pet form of the Yiddish word beyle ‘beautiful’, which was widely used in Jewish communities as a female given name. Kalman (2) and Rivlin belong here too.

Until the end of the 18th century, most Ashkenazic Jews did not have hereditary family names. In Hebrew documents, individuals were generally known by a given name and that of their father: X ben Y ‘X, son of Y’ or X bat Y ‘X, daughter of Y’. This pattern was not uniquely Ashkenazic: for more than 2,000 years, it was traditional for Jews of all origins. In German documents, the usual pattern was X Y, meaning ‘X, son of Y’; examples are Simon Abraham ‘Simon, the son of Abraham’, Marcus Nathan, and Moses Israel.

In Christian sources, Jews living in Poland were generally referred to either by their given name or by their given name plus a patronymic formed by adding the Polish suffix -owicz (germanized as -owitz) to the given name or status of the father (e.g. Lewkowicz ‘son of Lev or Levi’, Rabinowitz ‘son of the rabbi’).

11.4.2 JEWISH LOCATIVE NAMES

From the Middle Ages to the Holocaust, despite frequent outbursts of ignorance and racial hatred, massacres, expulsions, and pogroms, Jewish communities were able to establish themselves throughout central Europe. Jewish communities in places like Heilbronn, Maribor, and Speyer gave rise to family names such as Halpern, Morpurgo, and Spier/Shapiro. Those found in Britain include also Berlin (which may have alternative origins), Ginsberg, and Horowitz. Jewish locative family names also included the suffixal type exemplified by Bamberger, Hamburger, Oppenheimer, and Posner. Apparent members of this locative class, such as Blumberg, Friedland, and Sternberg, all of which exist as place-names in Germany, in some cases as the names of several different places, may sometimes really be ornamental names (see section 11.4.3). It is, however, invidious to single out particular Jewish settlements. Almost every major city in Europe had its Jewish quarter. Some, for example the Jewish quarter in Prague, were extremely prosperous and cultured. Other Jewish families came from less wealthy ghettos in German- and Polish-speaking cities or from shtetlech (singular shtetl), which were small provincial market towns with a predominantly Jewish population. People from the ghettos sometimes adopted as a family name the name of the city in which the ghetto was found, and a shtetl too would occasionally yield a family name (examples are Rudin, Modlin, and Karlin). However, for the most part locative family names of this type bypassed Britain and Ireland and went straight to the United States, where they are found in large numbers. Many of these Eastern Ashkenazic family names have been collected in Alexander Beider’s great Dictionary of Jewish Surnames from the Russian Empire and its companion volume, A Dictionary of Jewish Surnames from the Kingdom of Poland.

Another important category of Jewish locative family names is typical of Frankfurt am Main and western German cities in general. This consists of family names derived from house signs: Haas ‘hare’, Rothschild ‘red shield’, Schiff ‘ship’, and Strauss ‘ostrich’. Not all of these are exclusively or even typically Jewish, however.

Jewish family names ending in -ski are normally locative, of eastern Slavic etymology, for the most part originally Polish. The -ski ending was added to a place-name to form a locative family name. Its function was very similar to that of the French preposition de. The oldest Polish -ski names typically denoted aristocratic status (rather like de + place-name in France and England), but the suffix came to be more widely used. When Jewish surnames in Poland became compulsory, many people adopted locative family names ending in -ski, such as Gorski, Baranowski, and Jablonski, and also created relationship names of similar structure, such as Abramowski and Jakubowski. However, in the UK -ski names are now more in evidence due to late 20th- and early 21st-century Polish immigration.

11.4.3 ORNAMENTAL NAMES, HANDOUT NAMES, AND OTHER KINDS OF NICKNAME

A 19th-century Jewish joke tells of a husband coming home from the registry office and saying to his wife, ‘Well, my dear, we have a new surname—Schweiss.’ ‘Schweiss?’ she exclaims. ‘We don’t want a horrible name like Schweiss! Why didn’t you pay a little bribe to the registrar to get us a nice name?’ ‘Ha! A bribe!’ responds the husband. ‘You don’t know what it’s like up there. Why, the w alone cost me 500 florins.’ To get the joke, you have to know that in German Schweiss means ‘sweat’ but Scheiss(e) means ‘shit’.

Such is the persistent legend about the compulsory imposition of family names in 19th-century Europe. In reality, however, imposition of family names with offensive overtones seems to have been rare—or at any rate, rarely documented. No such names with offensive overtones have reached the Jewish communities of Britain and Ireland. It is far more common to find offensive nicknames in the medieval Christian communities of central Europe. By contrast, the most numerous category of Ashkenazic family names of nickname origin embodies words taken from the German lexicon that were not necessarily related to the personal characteristics of their first bearers but were selected because they had either neutral or positive connotations. Such names may have been handed out arbitrarily by officials rather than chosen for any perceived appropriateness. Equally, they could have been selected by the bearers themselves as ornamental coinages and registered without objection. Among these are words denoting flora and fauna, metals and stones, natural phenomena, food and household utensils, words associated with the calendar (days of the week, months), and coins. Various terms have been used in onomastic studies to designate these names: arbitrary, ornamental, handout, and artificial. The first is a poor term, since even if no relationship exists between a name and the characteristics of its bearer, the name is unlikely to have been the result of a completely random decision; we may assume that some motivation normally prompted its adoption. The second term, ornamental, is better. Indeed, many names of this group are distinguished by words that have positive associations. However, it must be admitted that is not always the case. In some names, the meaning is at best neutral (see further below), and occasionally unflattering (Ochsenkopf ‘ox-head’ is on record, though not in Britain, but in any case there is no more reason to regard this as truly offensive than Gentile English names such as Bulled and Sheepshanks). Where the name is known with certainty or near certainty to have been bestowed by officialdom, handout is appropriate. Artificial usefully points to the occasional unstructured putting together of two words specifically to form a surname, perhaps just because of their separate positive associations (as in the case of Goldwasser, anglicized as Goldwater), though this appears rare; names that might belong here, such as Feingold ‘fine gold’ and Gluckstein ‘fortune stone’, can be readily understood as, or as if, true compounds. Examples of ornamental or handout names in this dictionary, sometimes anglicized, include names on a scale of desirability running from Goldblatt ‘gold leaf’ to the equivocal Sackwild, which apparently means either ‘game bird’ or ‘venison in a bag’.

Other Jewish examples that are normally ornamental or handout names denote features of the landscape, for example Berg ‘mountain’ and Feld ‘field’, or precious things, such as Gold and Stein ‘(precious) stone’, and compounds including these elements, such as Goldstein ‘gold stone’ and Sternberg ‘star hill’, some of which duplicate actual place-names or are formed in such a way as to suggest place-names. As Jewish names, these can only rarely denote people who actually lived by a mountain or field, because European Jewish people at the time of surname registration were typically urban.

As well as using landscape terms, Ashkenazic family names derived from nicknames typically fall into one of the following categories (with examples from German or Yiddish):

- terms denoting precious metals and gems, e.g. Gold ‘gold’, Silber ‘silver’; some of these nicknames may refer to the bearer’s occupation;
- adjectives denoting beauty, e.g. Fein ‘fine, excellent’, Schön ‘beautiful’;
- terms denoting personal characteristics, e.g. Klein ‘small’, Reich ‘rich’, Ernst ‘serious’;
- adjectives denoting colours, e.g. Braun (Bron) ‘brown’, Roth ‘red’, Schwarz ‘black’, Weiss ‘white’;
- terms for fruit and flowers, e.g. Apfel ‘apple’, Blum ‘flower’, Mandel ‘almond’; or the trees producing them, e.g. Mandelbaum;
- terms for food products, e.g. Korn ‘grain’, Zucker ‘sugar’, Salz ‘salt’;
- words relating to the heavens, e.g. Himmel ‘heaven, sky’, Stern ‘star’;
- words for minerals, e.g. Eisen ‘iron’, Kupfer ‘copper’.

Some Jewish descriptive names are formed in Polish, for example Kania ‘kite’, Maślanka ‘buttermilk’, and Rogala ‘roe deer’ or ‘croissant’. All these names may also be non-Jewish.

11.4.4 JEWISH OCCUPATIONAL NAMES

Occupational names adopted by Jews in northern Europe are by and large indistinguishable from those used by German speakers, for example Metzger ‘butcher’, Schneider ‘tailor’, and Schreiber ‘scribe’.

11.4.5 JEWISH RELIGIOUS STATUS NAMES

In Hebrew sources from all European countries we often find additional names that indicate either descent from the Jewish priestly caste (Kohanim) or Levite origin. Among the expressions that label the Kohanim (that is, the descendants of the Biblical Aaron, brother of Moses), most common are ha-Kohen and the acronym KTz, which is an abbreviation for Kohen Tzedeq ‘priest of righteousness’.

Levite origin (corresponding to descendants of the Biblical Levi, one of Jacob’s sons) is conveyed by such Hebrew expressions as ha-Levi (Levite) as well as the acronym SGL, the abbreviation of SeGan Leviya ‘associate of the Levitic order’. When Jews were obliged to adopt surnames, these origins were bases for the very common surnames Kohn (Cohen), Kahn, Kogan, and Kagan (the two last forms are typically Russian, since that language has no /h/ and no symbol for it, and regularly replaces it with the letter g). Levite origin is often expressed by the names Levi, Levy, Loewy, Lev, and Levine; the latter two are typical of the Russian Empire. The abbreviations KTz and SGL gave rise to the common surnames Katz and Segal respectively. Richter, German for ‘judge’, is found in the sense ‘rabbinic judge’.

11.5 Jewish names in eastern Europe and beyond the sphere of German influence

In the areas that were annexed by the Russian Empire when independent Poland was dismembered between 1772 and 1795—roughly corresponding to modern Belarus, most of Ukraine, and Lithuania—the situation was different. In that region, also called the Pale of Settlement, the law requiring Jews to acquire family names was promulgated in 1804. During the four following decades, all Jews received surnames, either chosen voluntarily or imposed by religious or secular authorities. The authorities of the Jewish community (Kahal) were responsible for implementing the surnaming process in Russia, so Russian Jews assumed family names within their own communities. Since there were no regulations concerning the selection of surnames, it seems quite possible that many surnames were chosen by those who bore them. There are many examples, however, in which this appears not to be the case. Instead there was an obvious methodology for constructing a series of surnames. For instance, in several districts of eastern Belarus about a third of the surnames were metonymics ending in the suffix -in. In northern Ukraine about half of all Jewish inhabitants had surnames that ended in -man. Most likely, these names were invented by the Kahal authorities, who used the same patterns in order to create many names during a short period.

The adoption of surnames within a Jewish community reflected linguistic differences. Numerous appellations were created in Yiddish, the language spoken by Jews within the Pale of Settlement. There were important regional peculiarities, but there was no single region in which standard Yiddish, the Yiddish of dictionaries and vocabularies, was spoken. The two principal dialects of Yiddish used by Jews in the Russian Empire were South-Eastern Yiddish (SEY, also called Ukrainian Yiddish) and North-Eastern Yiddish (NEY, also called Lithuanian Yiddish). Variation in pronunciation and spelling represented differences between the dialects. To /u/, /o/, and /ey/ of NEY corresponded /i/, /u/, and /oy/ in SEY, respectively. Thus, the surnames Kuperman, Nodel, and Reytmán could be found in NEY territory, while Kiperman, Nudel, and Roytmán were from the SEY region; these can be compared with the German Kupfermann, Nadel, and Rotmann. The territories in which these differences are found are difficult to specify precisely, especially since the Holocaust, but in reference to these vowel alternations the area where the NEY vowels were used corresponds roughly to Lithuania and Belarus, while the SEY vowels were found in Ukraine and Bessarabia (now Moldova). Few such typically eastern Yiddish forms appear in Britain, but they are frequent in America.

Hebrew was also used to create surnames, though not so frequently as German/Yiddish or Polish; compare, for instance, German Schneider, Kravitz from Polish krawiec (frequent in America), and the less familiar Hebrew-derived Chait or Chiat, all meaning ‘tailor’. As noted above, religious offices have given rise to such Hebrew names as Cohen (and its German- or Polish-mediated equivalent Kaplan), Kantor, and Rabin (2).

11.6 Jewish names in Italy

Jews from Italy are of varied ancestry. Those from the northern part of the country mainly descended from Ashkenazic Jews who migrated to that area in the 13th century. Several common Italian Jewish names, such as Ottolenghi ‘from the town of Ettlingen’, allude to this origin, as does the name Tedesco ‘German’. Many Sephardic Jews came to Italy during the 15th and 16th centuries, directly or indirectly, from Spain. Finally, a group of local Jews had their roots in the Italian Peninsula from time immemorial. They may have come directly from Palestine during the earliest stages of the diaspora, and just stayed. The time eventually came when they, too, were obliged to take hereditary family names. Generally, they took locative surnames based on the names of the places where they lived. Accordingly, numerous names of Italian Jews are toponymic and not readily distinguishable from those of people of Italian ancestry: Montefiore (which we have already mentioned), Ascoli, and Volterra.

11.7 Israeli Jewish names

Almost all Jewish names in Britain and Ireland are of the traditional European types discussed so far. In Israel, however, some new patterns have emerged. Israeli Jews have not only standard Ashkenazic and Sephardic names but have also often created names in their country of origin during the 20th century. All these names are Hebrew, but few are in evidence through Jewish migration since the foundation of Israel. A few, such as Baruch, David, and Ovadia were given names already in use among the Ashkenazim or the Sephardim; others are truly novel, from a Western perspective. Several categories of new names are patronymic. The first category coincides with, or overlaps, that of traditional given names: Yaakov, Yosef. The second is constructed after the traditional patronymic pattern Ben (son of) X; examples are Ben Abraham, Ben David, Ben Simon. The third involves adding the Hebrew possessive suffix -i to a masculine given name: for example, Aharoni, Shimoni, Yitz(c)haki. Numerous other names are artificial, often obtained by taking words (common nouns, adjectives, place-names, personal names) from the Bible. Sharon is among the few examples occurring in significant numbers in Britain. These new names replaced previous names assigned in the diaspora. In some cases, the old European names were Hebraized, replaced either with a Hebrew name that sounded like the old name or with the direct Hebrew translation of the old name.

12. Family names of recent immigrants in Britain and Ireland

As already mentioned, in this dictionary we distinguish between established names, which are well evidenced in the 1881 census, and recent immigrant names, which were not present in 1881 or were present only in very small numbers. Most of the recent immigrant names in this dictionary have only had a significant frequency in Britain since 1945.

It might be said that all the inhabitants of Britain are descendants of immigrants with the exception of the relatively few whose ancestors were the aboriginal Brittonic-speaking peoples (Welsh, Cornish, and Pictish), who constitute only a comparatively small percentage of the present-day population. The ethnography of Ireland is a different matter; the majority of the population outside Ulster could probably trace descent from Gaelic-speaking people who were already in Ireland early in the first millennium; see section 5. Taking this long view, the first questions that remain for the student of family names—unanswerable ones in many cases—are: when did the relevant group of ancestors arrive in Britain, and where did they come from? Were they Anglo-Saxons in the 5th and 6th centuries, coming in from what is now Denmark and north-west Germany, taking advantage of the collapse of the imperial Roman administration that had prevailed in Britain for some 400 years until the traditionally acknowledged date of AD 410? Or were they Scandinavians (including Vikings), who arrived in the 8th to 10th centuries? Or were they perhaps descendants of the Norman and Breton courtiers and followers of William the Conqueror, whose family names, such as Blunt, Daubney, Neville, and Jeckell, still carry a certain prestige among their bearers if they know them to be Norman (or of later Continental courtiers of kings from William II to Henry III, such as Vallance, Spencer, Peto)? Since 1066, through nearly ten centuries during which family names first became established and then underwent many vicissitudes, there has been a steady trickle, rising occasionally to a cascade, of immigrants from various other parts of the world, bringing their family names with them, or names that have been appropriated as inherited family names. There was a regular and steady exchange of population between Britain and the Low Countries (what are now the Netherlands and Belgium), ranging in social status from the many medieval families of Flemish weavers (Clutterbuck, Dipper, Gorick) and others, somewhat later, who were apparently water engineers (e.g. Vamplew), to the high-powered administrators who accompanied the Dutch stadtholder William of Orange, who in 1688 was invited to share the monarchy of England, as King William III, with his English wife Mary II. William brought with him from the Netherlands a small group of supporters and advisers bearing Dutch names such as Bentinck and Keppel, which, in the course of time, duly became established as English family names.

For hundreds of years, migration from one part of Europe to another was not particularly unusual, occurring sometimes for economic or cultural reasons, sometimes to escape persecution. Usually the numbers of migrants were quite small. In early modern times, some men of Iberian extraction who founded families in England are recorded in Tudor documents, including people of Portuguese ultimate origin, arriving via what became British India (see Nunes (2), Lopes). Others came to work in developing industries from countries where particular expertise existed, such as miners and metalworkers from Germany (e.g. Carlson, Senogles). Victorian England experienced some immigration from Scandinavia and much more from eastern Europe. It is only in the last few decades that it has become fashionable or politically expedient for governments to try, with more or less limited success, to impose controls on immigration. Earlier sections of this introduction have singled out as separate topics the history in Britain of French Huguenot and Jewish family names, representing major immigrant groups of different periods, the former from the late 16th century onwards, the latter mainly from the late 19th and again in the 20th century.

Since the end of the Second World War, immigration to Britain has increased substantially from all over the world, especially from countries that were formerly part of the British Empire and, more recently, from continental Europe. As a result, we now live in a multicultural, multi-ethnic society, as illustrated by figures from the 2011 census on the main languages of UK residents. For example, approximately 546,000 people identified their main language as Polish; 322,000 as Cantonese or some other form of Chinese; 273,000 as Punjabi; 190,000 as Yoruba; 159,000 as Arabic; 147,000 as French; and 99,000 as Turkish. FaNBI has done its best to take account of such facts, while not forgetting that the primary function of this work is to explain the established names of Britain and Ireland.

13. Chinese family names in Britain<sup>5</sup>

Chinese immigration into the UK began in the early 1800s, and this originally very small population increased slowly but steadily until the mid-20th century: 1,200 persons of Chinese origin were counted in the census of 1921, mainly in port cities such as London and Liverpool, and 12,523 in 1951. This was the prelude to exponential growth in the latter part of the century, with numbers reaching 154,363 in 1981, the year in which UK legislation deprived citizens of the British overseas territory of Hong Kong of the automatic right of abode in the UK. The increase was driven firstly by emigration from the New Territories of Hong Kong and augmented latterly also by emigration of Chinese residents from the territories of the future Malaysia and Singapore, themselves formerly part of the British Empire.

Just over 300 family names in Britain today are borne by many individual people of Chinese origin (in the broadest sense). There are almost no surnames in common use in China today that did not give rise to a British family name, partly due to the small number of frequent family names in China itself and the large number of immigrants. Most of them are from southern China, particularly from the Cantonese- and Hakka-speaking regions (e.g. the present-day Guangdong province and especially Hong Kong, hence the importance of Cantonese forms), but some come from other regions, e.g. Putonghua- (Mandarin-)speaking northern and south-western China, and the Min-dialect-speaking regions of south-eastern China and Taiwan. Some family names arrived with immigrants from Malaysia and Singapore, and other regions of the Chinese diaspora.

13.1 A brief history of Chinese surnames

It used to be claimed that the surname system was created by Fu Xi (a legendary emperor from before the Xia dynasty (2070–1600 BC), according to early history books), but this claim is never substantiated. Now it is believed, on the basis of archaeological findings, that surnames existed before the Shang dynasty (1600–1046 BC). For example, as revealed by the records from oracle bone scripts and bronze inscriptions, at least eight major surnames, known as the ‘Eight Great Surnames of Antiquity’, existed at that time.

Prior to the Warring States period (475–221 BC), hereditary family names were borne only by aristocratic families. Ordinary people did not have family names. There were two types of family names in use during these early periods, known as xing (姓), or ‘clan names’, and shi (氏), or ‘lineage names’. Xing were names of noble clans and are believed to have originated from matriarchal societies in prehistoric times; perhaps they once represented maternal lineages. By contrast, shi emerged in the later patriarchal societies and were used to identify different branches of clans; bearing a shi gradually became a symbol of prestige. Up to the Western Zhou dynasty (1046–771 BC), xing were used only to address females, while shi were used for males.

Later, shi became more predominant than xing. The number of shi rose significantly during the Western Zhou dynasty and the Spring and Autumn period (770–476 BC). Most present-day Chinese surnames trace their origin back to these periods, when Chinese society was feudal. The king or emperor governed all the lands in the country, but at the same time he granted royal-family members and favoured officials various landholdings or fiefdoms, some of which later became different states in their own right. In many cases, the inhabitants of these fiefdoms adopted the names of their feudal territory as a symbol of their lineage, and this contributed to the remarkable increase of shi in these periods.

Constant wars between different states in ancient China eventually led to the demise of the noble clans. At the start of the Spring and Autumn period, there were about 170 states. Gradually, smaller states came to be annexed by more powerful states. By the end of the Warring States period, only seven major states remained. Eventually, the state of Qin, led by the emperor Qin Shi Huang (259–210 BC), annihilated the other six states and united the nation in 221 BC. After that, surnames were gradually acquired by all classes. The distinction between xing and shi became less clear, and the two terms were eventually fused into a compound word with the general meaning ‘family name’.

13.2 Typology of Chinese family names

When compared with the five commonly recognized types of European family names (relationship names, occupational names, status names, locative names, nicknames), Chinese surnames can be grouped into similar recognizable types, with some important differences:

- Relationship names: often from the given name, style name (a name bestowed upon a person on reaching adulthood, in addition to their given name, traditional in a number of East Asian countries), or posthumous title of a historical official or important person. In contrast to European relationship names (notably patronymics), which can commemorate an ancestor of any social level, Chinese relationship names seem to commemorate only important people, particularly members of royal families and higher officials.
- Occupational names: as in Europe, some Chinese family names originated from people’s occupations or official posts. For instance, the surname Szeto (司徒) was the title of an official post in charge of national security and military affairs. Bu (卜) ‘divination’ named astrologers or fortune tellers who performed divination.
- Status names: a small number of Chinese family names come from the original bearer’s status (as distinct from his occupation). The most notable example is Wang (王), meaning ‘royal’, which was used in memory of the royal status of the bearer’s ancestors. Others derive from the rank or noble title of a bearer’s ancestors, such as Hou (‘marquis’).

- Locative names: Chinese family names of this type can be derived from buildings, rivers, or postal stations near the residence of the bearer’s ancestors, or from villages, towns, fiefs, or states. Most Chinese locative names derive from larger political units such as fiefs and estates. Some were adopted to commemorate the name of an ancient state—in some cases a state that had been invaded and destroyed by a more powerful state, so only the family name survives as a record of the state that once existed. Other locative names were from the name of a fief granted to an important official, whose descendants inherited the name of the fief as a family name. This was a rather common practice, particularly during the Western Zhou dynasty (1046–771 BC) and the Spring and Autumn period (770–476 BC).
- Nicknames: there are no Chinese family names that can properly be classified as being derived from nicknames, but educated Chinese adults in ancient China had, in addition to their given name, what is commonly referred to as a style name (an additional name bestowed on an individual on reaching adulthood), which was a major source of Chinese family names.
- Family names were sometimes also created or acquired in ways other than those mentioned above. Some family names were adopted as a replacement of a previous name. There were many reasons for this. Sometimes a family name had to be changed because it happened to be part of the given name or the title of a new emperor; it was taboo in ancient China to bear a name that was identical to any part of the emperor’s name, so any family unfortunate enough to bear such a name had to adopt a new one. Other people would have a new family name bestowed on them by the emperor as a mark of favour, in recognition of services rendered, or in some cases as a punishment. As in many other cultures, some people changed their family name to escape from a feud or from persecution. Other family names emerged in variant forms through mispronunciation, mistranscription, or simplification.
- Newly adopted family names did not always fall into one of the above categories. Some people who had to change their name, for one reason or another, replaced their original (written) family name with another Chinese character that had the same or a similar pronunciation, logography, or meaning, in this way creating a new surname.

13.3 Chinese population movement

The Han Chinese, originally residing in north China, spread into southern China at different periods of Chinese history, as a result of wars, uprisings, coups, and, in particular, the continuous invasions of northern China by nomadic ethnic groups such as Huns, Mongols, Jurchens (also known as Manchus), Khitans, Tangutians, and the Xianbei ethnic groups. The southward migration of the Han Chinese had a major impact on the original inhabitants of southern China, who in the course of time came to be assimilated by the Han. Some nomadic ethnic groups, attracted by the prosperity of Han culture, adopted cultural practices (including names) from the Han Chinese. These factors were among many that contributed to an increase in the number of people bearing Han Chinese family names.

In addition to migration within China, people from southern China also emigrated to other parts of the world. From the 17th century onwards, driven by famine, war, and other factors, many people from what is now Guangdong province, parts of Guangxi Zhuang autonomous region, Hainan province, Fujian province, and Taiwan emigrated to other parts of South East Asia (e.g. to Thailand, Vietnam, Cambodia, Singapore, Malaysia, Indonesia, and the Philippines). Some of the descendants of these Chinese emigrants in South East Asia later migrated to other areas in the world, including Britain and Ireland. The number of Chinese emigrants to Europe and North America increased significantly in the 19th century, especially after the First Anglo-Chinese War, also known as the First Opium War, of 1839–42. In the 20th century, a large number of people came to Britain from Hong Kong, which was a British colony from 1898 to 1997. The majority of people in Britain bearing a Chinese family name come from Hong Kong.

13.4 Chinese dialects and their romanization

There are several ‘dialects’ of Chinese. Though scholars have divergent opinions on the classifications of those dialects, and though it might be preferable to describe some of them as distinct languages, it is traditionally asserted that there are seven major groups: Mandarin, Yue, Wu, Min, Hakka, Xiang, and Gan. Among these, three groups of dialects constitute the main sources of the family names of Chinese origin in the UK: Yue dialects (including standard Cantonese, primarily spoken in Guangzhou, Hong Kong, Macao, and neighbouring areas, and Taishanese, spoken in Taishan and its surrounding areas in southern Guangdong province); Mandarin (also known as Putonghua or Guoyu, the standard language in dominant use nationwide today); and Southern Min dialects (including Teochew, spoken in eastern Guangdong province, and Hokkien/Taiwanese, spoken mainly in Fujian province and Taiwan). In general, because of substantial differences in pronunciation, the various Chinese ‘dialects’ are mutually unintelligible. However, thanks to the unification of the Chinese writing system during the reign of the emperor Qin Shi Huang (259–210 BC), the Chinese have a uniform writing system, which makes communication between speakers of different dialects possible.

The Chinese writing system is logographic, not alphabetical; that is, the symbols generally represent word meanings directly, rather than the phonemes (distinctive units of pronunciation) of those words. Transliteration of characters representing family names into Roman alphabetic characters is a particular problem. There are two main transliteration systems: Wade-Giles and pinyin. Wade-Giles is now more or less obsolete, but was widely used up to the end of the 20th century. Pinyin is the modern standard. However, it should be noted that the pinyin systems used in mainland China and Taiwan are different in certain details. The pinyin system used in Taiwan was originally based on the Wade-Giles system and revised several times in the 20th century. In contrast, the pinyin system in mainland China was promoted after the establishment of the People’s Republic of China in 1949, and kept in constant use and eventually accepted as the standard norm for the transliteration of Chinese characters. That is why the name of the former Chinese leader Mao Tse-Tung (based on Wade-Giles) is now conventionally written as Mao Zedong. However, this standard and official transliteration system is almost completely irrelevant to the romanization of family names. The application of different systems has resulted in numerous different forms of what are etymologically the same Chinese family names. Moreover, early Chinese emigrants came from different Chinese dialect regions, and these emigrants tried to transliterate their surnames based on their dialectal pronunciations. It should be noted that the same Chinese written character may be pronounced in remarkably different ways in different Chinese dialects, which has led to great complexities in the attempts to romanize Chinese names. For example, the surname 黃 (literally ‘yellow’) is pronounced as Wong in Cantonese, Huang in Mandarin, Ng in Teochew, and Wee or Ooi in Hokkien/Taiwanese. All have given rise to what in a UK context may be considered distinct family names. To further complicate the picture, some Chinese emigrants adopted non-standard romanized forms, for example by making use of the potential of some English (and distinctly non-Chinese) spelling rules in transliterating their family names. For example, some transliterated /u/ as oo rather than as u. That is why what is etymologically the same Chinese family name may take a range of different forms in this dictionary.

13.5 Multiple origins of Chinese family names in the form used in the West

Many Chinese family names in the West have multiple origins, for a range of different reasons. Firstly, within the same dialect, two or more distinct Chinese characters which are pronounced in ways that sound different to a Chinese speaker, for example because of differences in tone, may be written in English using the same Roman-alphabet spelling. Sometimes, Chinese characters also share the same pronunciation, leading to the use of the same romanized spelling. Secondly, distinct Chinese family names which share a similar pronunciation in different dialects, for example the surname 吳 in Cantonese and the surname 黃 in Teochew, may receive the same romanization; in this case, both are romanized as Ng. To complicate matters still further, the People’s Republic of China has adopted an official simplified system for writing Chinese characters, but Hong Kong, Taiwan, and other places still use the traditional symbols. In this work, we also use the traditional symbols.

13.6 Records of Chinese family names

The creation of the Chinese writing system can be traced back at least to the Shang dynasty (1600–1046 BC), and many Chinese surnames were documented in very early books which are the major reference works for scholars studying surname origins. The earliest known historical book on the origins of Chinese surnames is Shi Ben (世本, 'The Generational Origins'), written in the Warring States period (475–221 BC). Other important historical books on the origins of Chinese family names include Yuan He Xing Zuan (元和姓纂), Xing Shi Kao Lue (姓氏考略), Tong Zhi - Shi Zu Lue (通志•氏族略), Xing Yuan (姓源), and Xing Xi (姓觴). However, some of the records of persons in these books may be legendary, and some scholars are sceptical about them, particularly those concerning figures prior to the Xia dynasty (2070–1600 BC), such as the legendary king Huang Di (traditional dates 2697–2599 BC), also known as the Yellow Emperor. While it is difficult to find any archaeological support for these records, FaNBI still makes use of them in order to present as complete a picture as possible, consistent with the available historical evidence, of the origins of Chinese surnames. Many Chinese family names in common use today were listed in a very well-known ancient book called Bai Jia Xing ('Hundreds of Chinese surnames'), written during the Northern Song dynasty (AD 960–1127).

13.7 Previous work on Chinese family names

As mentioned above, there have been many historical works on the origins of Chinese family names, and a number of more recent publications concerning their origins have also emerged. Some of them offer only stories, legends, and anecdotes, and have no references. The most comprehensive publication in mainland China so far is the fruit of a major project, Zhong Guo Xin Shi Da Ci Dian (中國姓氏大辭典) (The Comprehensive Dictionary of Surnames in China) compiled by Yuan Yida (袁義達) and Qiu Jiaru (邱家儒). It assembles and explains 23,813 surnames recorded in Chinese historical sources, archaeological findings, and censuses, including not only Han Chinese surnames but also many from the fifty-five minority ethnic groups in China. Unlike in a conventional dictionary of Chinese family names, the authors provide the corresponding English spelling forms for each family name used by overseas Chinese, though they do not specify the dialectal origins of each English spelling form. The information about historical origins for each family name can be traced with precision to references listed at the end of the dictionary. Another recent comprehensive publication is Zhong Hua Xing Shi Yuan Liu Da Ci Dian (中華姓氏源流大辭典) (China Surnames Origins Dictionary), based on the 30-year research of Xu Tiesheng (徐鐵生), who documented 31,683 surnames (including those from minority ethnic groups) and their origins and detailed geographical distributions in modern China. Information on the origins of the Chinese family names in this dictionary can be found especially in Zhong Guo Xin Shi Da Ci Dian, and in Zhong Guo Xing Shi Ci Dian (中國姓氏辭典) (Dictionary of Chinese Surnames) compiled by Wang Zonghu (汪宗虎) and Chen Mingyuan (陳明遠). A number of other excellent works on the origin of Chinese surnames are listed in Sheau-yueh J. Chao's In Search of Your Asian Roots: Genealogical Research on Chinese Surnames.

It should be noted that many family names stated in this dictionary to be Korean or Vietnamese are ultimately of Chinese origin, and this is explained in individual entries wherever possible.

14. Family names from the Indian subcontinent<sup>6</sup>

By far the richest source of family-name diversity in Britain (and to some extent Ireland) since the Second World War has been the Indian subcontinent. This includes the present-day countries of India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka, but until 1947 all these countries were part of British India, within the British Empire. The rulers of the Empire in the 19th and early 20th century took the view, which may now seem somewhat naive, that any citizen of the Empire had a right to live anywhere in the world that was a territory of the Empire, including its original homeland in Britain. Following the achievement in 1947 of independence by India and Pakistan (the latter a Muslim single entity on independence, with West and East separated by the vast bulk of India), there were substantial movements of population in the subcontinent, accompanied by great communal violence, and the mainly Muslim state of Jammu and Kashmir was left partitioned and in 2016 still remains a matter of friction and dispute between India and Pakistan. Many Muslims abandoned their ancestral homes in order to make their way to the new state of Pakistan, while many Hindus travelled in the opposite direction. In these troubled circumstances, a substantial flow of migrants left the region altogether and made their way to start a new life in Britain, Australia, Canada, and other former Empire countries. Economic hardships as well as political upheavals encouraged a continuation of this process of migration in subsequent decades. Any account of the approximately 1,300 family names from the subcontinent in Britain in the 21st century must therefore make some attempt to reflect the great cultural and linguistic diversity of the Indian diaspora, in the broadest sense.

14.1 Linguistic preliminaries concerning family names in India

The greatest number of Indian family names are derived from Sanskrit, the ancient language that occupies a position in India similar to that of Latin in Europe; that is, they are either derived from modern forms of the ancient Indo-Aryan language of which Sanskrit is the literary variant, such as Hindi or Bengali, or from modern forms of the Sanskrit names themselves. Even in southern India where Dravidian languages are spoken, Sanskrit surnames are quite common. They are usually adopted with minimal alteration to suit the phonological patterns of the languages of the region, such as Telugu or Tamil. More extensive alteration is found only in a few cases, such as Khatri (from a vernacular form of Sanskrit kshatriya). Many of the names in the Dravidian language area, such as Naidoo, are of Indo-Aryan origin, and only any inflectional endings which may appear as part of the name are likely to be Dravidian. Names of Dravidian origin (such as Chetty, Menon, Pillai, and Reddy) are quite few in number.

Perso-Arabic surnames, i.e. Arabic names that have been adapted from the usage of Persian (Farsi) speakers, are the norm among Indian Muslims, but even among Hindus and other non-

Muslim Indians a good number are found: from Arabic, for example, we find Dewan, Majmudar, Malik, and Shroff; and from Farsi Doshi, Sarkar, and Sood. A few occupational family names, as noted below, have come from English. An example of an Indian family name that has been adapted from Portuguese is Mistry, from mestre ‘master, expert’.

14.2 The languages of the subcontinent

According to some authorities, several hundred languages are spoken in the subcontinent. They and their various dialects have differing degrees of mutual comprehensibility. For some purposes a language such as Bihari or Rajasthani may be regarded as a separate language in its own right, while for other purposes it may be classified as a dialect of Hindi. These languages and dialects, however one chooses to classify them, have contributed in different proportions to the stock of family names in Britain.

The Indian constitution recognizes just 23 ‘national’ languages, while the Ethnologue (<http://www.ethnologue.com/country/IN>) identifies no fewer than 447 living languages in India alone, 63 of them classified as ‘institutional’. Almost all the languages of India fall into one of two quite separate, unrelated language families. Indo-Aryan languages are spoken in the northern states, the main ones being Hindi, Urdu (in effect a Muslim form of Hindi), Bengali, Panjabi, Marathi, and Gujarati, while in the south of India Dravidian languages (notably Tamil, Malayalam, Kannada, and Telugu) predominate. Despite these linguistic differences, many family names are widespread in both the southern and northern states of India, sharing a common origin, in many cases going back to Sanskrit (an Indo-European language), and in some cases embodying references to Hindu deities and ancient beliefs.

The northern states can be subdivided into the north-central region, where the principal states are Bihar, Madhya Pradesh, Rajasthan, and Uttar Pradesh; the north-east, with the principal states of Assam, Bengal, and Orissa; the west, which includes Goa, Gujarat, and Maharashtra; and two states outside these groups—the single state known as Jammu and Kashmir, and the Panjab. The official language of the north-central states, and one of the two official languages of India as a whole, is Hindi. (The other is, de facto, English, with legal provision for it to be phased out eventually, though with little sign of this happening.) The official languages of the other states mentioned here are Assamese (Assam), Bengali (Bengal), Oriya (Orissa), Konkani (Goa), Gujarati (Gujarat), Marathi (Maharashtra), Kashmiri (Jammu and Kashmir), and Panjabi (Panjab), among which the most prolific providers of names in Britain are Bengali (especially the Sylheti dialect), Gujarati, and Panjabi (especially the Mirpuri dialect). Among other Indo-Aryan languages, Nepali occasionally appears in this work; it is also among the official languages of India because significant numbers of its speakers live there. The southern states are Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka, Kerala, and Tamil Nadu. The official languages in these states are Telugu (Andhra Pradesh), Kannada (Karnataka), Malayalam (Kerala), and Tamil (Tamil Nadu). Other Indian states have been omitted here because no family names included in this work are exclusively associated with them. Some names are confined to a single linguistic region, but others are found in more than one.

The language situation in Pakistan is of similar complexity. The official language is Urdu (which is also an official language of India, which—it should not be forgotten—is a pluralistic society with a sizeable Muslim population). Only about 8 per cent of the population of Pakistan actually use Urdu in everyday life. Urdu is closely related to Hindi (the two spoken languages are mutually comprehensible) but, unlike Hindi, it is written in Arabic script. Far more commonly spoken are regional languages such as Panjabi, Kashmiri, and Pashto.

In Sri Lanka the predominant language is Sinhalese, an Indo-Aryan language related to Hindi. Sri Lanka has a minority Tamil population, speaking a Dravidian language. Although there is (or rather, has been) bitter feuding in Sri Lanka between Tamils and Sinhalese, many of them share names of Sanskrit etymology, with few modern-language features distinguishing the names of the different populations.

14.3 Variation in names from the subcontinent

Many Indian names have variant forms. For the most part, they are spelling variants: Bhandari/Bhanderi, Bhat/Bhatt, Chakrabarti/Chakraborty, Chowdhury with many variants, Das/Dass, Rooprai/Ruprai, and so on. Some have what are, in an English context at least, phonetic variants as well: Sachdev/Sachdeva, Sankar/Shankar, Seth/Sheth. Some names have (partially) anglicized variants, such as Bose for Basu and Ghose for Ghosh. In some cases, anglicization affects only the spelling, as in Sircar for Sarkar. Some names have sanskritized variants, analogous to the earlier European practice of latinizing names (as with, for example, Carolus Linnaeus adapting the form of Swedish Carl Linné, or, by translation, Agricola for German Bauer): Bandopadhyay occurs for Banerjee, Chattopadhyay for Chatterjee, and Dwivedi for Dube. Bajaj and Shroff, names ultimately of Arabic origin, have variants Bazaz and Saraf that are closer to their Arabic pronunciation.

Cognate names with different spelling and pronunciation occurring in entirely different communities are generally not treated as variants, because the form itself is an indicator of cultural affiliation. For example, the names Seth, Sethi, and Shetty, which go back to the vernacular forms of the same Sanskrit source, śresthī ‘head of a mercantile or other guild’, are listed separately because they differ with respect both to spelling, pronunciation, and to the social groups in which they occur.

14.4 Language, culture, and religion in the subcontinent

Whilst distinctions of historical linguistic classification shed some light on the family names among immigrants from the subcontinent, a far more important factor is religious affiliation. The principal religions of the subcontinent that are represented among names of immigrants to Britain and Ireland are Hinduism, Buddhism, Sikhism, Jainism, Zoroastrianism (practised by Parsis), and Islam. Hindu and Muslim names far outnumber the contributions of the others to the name-stock. Hinduism is the majority religion in India and Nepal. It is also practised by significant minorities in Bangladesh, Bali (Indonesia), and, through the immigration of indentured labourers of Indian origin under the British Empire, in Fiji, Guyana, and certain islands of the West Indies such as Trinidad, and by about half the population of Mauritius. Names and naming practices reflecting Hindu religious beliefs are cultivated throughout India, with adherents who are speakers of both Indo-Aryan and Dravidian languages. Jainism and Sikhism are more or less restricted to India and Pakistan. Parsis are Indian by definition, representing a community who left Persia because of persecution by Muslim rulers. Buddhism is practised in Sri Lanka and is, or has been, also a widespread religion in the Far East, especially in Mongolia, China, and most countries of South East Asia. With the exception of Hinduism, none of these religions have given rise to large numbers of distinctive family names in Britain. Things are very different with Islam. Islam is the state religion of both Pakistan and Bangladesh, but there are also many Muslims in India. It is, of course, also the dominant religion of much of the Middle East, North Africa, Malaysia, and Indonesia. Because the two major religions in particular are practised by speakers of a range of languages, and because their names and naming practices are determined by religious considerations rather than by linguistic ones, it makes more sense to identify and discuss family names of immigrants from the subcontinent in terms of religious affiliation rather than language.

14.4.1 HINDUISM

14.4.1.1 Hindu castes and names

In discussing Hindu names, we need to refer to social groups or communities called castes or jatis. These are usually endogamous groups (in which people marry only other members of their own group) that are associated with specific occupations. There are numerous such communities in modern India that are supposed to be affiliated with one of four broad social divisions called varnas, which have come down from ancient times: the Brahman or priestly class, the Kshatriya or warriors, the Vaishya or merchants, and the Shudra or cultivators and craftspeople. In the case of Brahman names, the jati is usually not identified in this work. In the case of non-Brahman names, however, only the jati is mentioned, because the varna affiliation of several of these jatis is disputed.

The many important non-Brahman communities mentioned in this work include the Ahirs, Baniyas, Kayasths, and Rajputs of northern India; the Aroras (see Arora), Jats, Khatri (see Khatri), and Soods (see Sood) of the Panjab; the Bhatias of the Panjab and Gujarat (see Bhatia); the Vanias of Gujarat; the Baidyas (see Vaidya) and the Baishyas of Bengal; the Bunts of Karnataka; the Nayars (see Nayar) of Kerala; and the Reddis (see Reddy) of Andhra Pradesh. The Rajputs are a prominent community of the Kshatriya varna. Several other communities (such as the Aroras, the Bhatias, the Khatri, the Soods, and several groups of Baniyas) also claim Kshatriya origin.

The Baniyas of northern India, the Vanias of Gujarat, the Aroras, Khatri, and Soods of the Panjab, and the Bhatias of Gujarat and the Panjab are mercantile communities. The Kayasths rose to prominence in medieval India as clerks and accountants and so are often referred to as the writers' caste. The traditional occupations of the other communities are agriculture or miscellaneous trades. The Baniyas of northern India are really a cluster of several communities, of which the Agarwal Baniyas, Oswal Baniyas, and Porwal Baniyas are mentioned separately in connection with certain family names.

Not every Hindu surname can be linked with a special community. Some are common to several jatis or varnas (for example, Naik and Prabhu), and some names have no special association with any community (for example, Kumar). In a number of cases, information on the community associated with the name was not available.

14.4.1.2 Origins of Indian names within the northern tradition

Full names from ancient India, as found in Sanskrit literature from the first millennium BC to the first millennium AD, typically consist of a single word, either a simple word or a compound word in which the final element often indicates the varna. Some common final elements in such names are -dāsa 'servant', -datta 'gift', -deva 'god', -gupta 'secret', -śarmā 'joy', -sena 'army, armament', -siṅha 'lion; eminent person', and -varna 'protection'. Sanskrit dictionaries indicate that -deva or -śarmā is the final element in the names of Brahmins, as -varma is for Kshatriyas, -gupta or -datta is for Vaishyas, and -dāsa is for Shudras. However, many ancient as well as modern Indian names can be found that contradict this classification. For instance, there are people whose name ends in -datta who are not Vaishyas, and there are those whose name ends in -dāsa who are not Shudras. These bound elements also have regularly evolved, in the languages descended from Sanskrit, as separate family names that are among the most common in modern India (see Das, Datta, Deo, Gupta, Sharma, Sen, Singh or its variant Sinha, and Varma).

Later on, many other names evolved similarly: for example, Chand from Sanskrit chandra 'pleasant, moon'; Kumar from Sanskrit kumāra 'son'; Lal from Hindi lāl 'darling', also 'red', from Sanskrit lāla 'cajoling'; Prasad from Sanskrit prasāda 'gift'; and Raj from Sanskrit rājā 'king'. Some of them occur as independent given names as well, but they all occur as the final elements of compound given names and sometimes as separate family names. Having had no family names previously, or having shed the previous family name for some reason, the bearers of these compound given names split those names to create new family names out of the separate elements. Most of the split family names of this second category are not associated with a specific caste or community.

The name of a clan or some similar subgroup of the community to which the bearer belongs is used as a family name quite frequently. Here are some examples:

Arora clan names: Ahuja, Batra, Chawla, Dua, Gulati, Khurana, Narang, and Sachdev.

Agarwal Bania clan names: Bansal, Goel, Mittal, and Singhal.

Rajput clan names: Bhatti, Chauhan, Parmar, Rathod, and Solanki.

Clan names in a subgroup of Saraswat Brahmans of the Panjab: Bali.

Aggarwal, Arora, Bhatia, Iyer, Khatri, Reddy, and Sood.

Some Indian family names come from names or nicknames of ancestors:

Bhargava ‘descendant of Bhrigu’; Bhatti, ancestor of a Rajput clan; Lakhani ‘descendant of Lakh(man)’.

In a few cases, the ancestors are mythical. Some of the family names have overt patronymic suffixes, such as -jā and -ānī. Some of these family names are from clan names, but these in turn go back to the name or nickname of the founder of the clan. Examples are Anand and Bedi, ancestors of Khatri clans.

Other Indian family names have evolved from ancestral place-names, especially in certain parts of India such as Maharashtra and Goa; for example:

Aggarwal ‘from Agar or Agroha’, Ahluwalia ‘from Ahlu’, Irani ‘from Iran’, Lad ‘from southern Gujarat’, and Mathur ‘from Mathura’.

Many names can be traced back to occupations or offices held by the ancestors of the name bearers; for example:

Bajaj ‘clothier’, Dalal ‘broker’, Majmudar ‘record-keeper’, Pathak ‘teacher’, Shah ‘merchant’, and Vaidya ‘physician’.

Among Parsis (see 14.4.5 below), one also finds occupational surnames from English.

Some people were awarded titles by native or foreign rulers, by the community, or by themselves. Some titles are simply honorific terms of address that have come down as surnames. Names meaning ‘king’, ‘chief’, ‘headman’, ‘lord’, ‘leader’, ‘eminent person’, ‘great one’, ‘honourable one’, and so on are particularly common; for instance:

Bhatt ‘lord’, Chakraborty ‘emperor’, Chowdhury ‘chief’, Nair ‘leader’, Sarkar ‘lord’, and Shetty ‘chief’.

It should also be noted that although some names such as Patel and Reddy ‘village headman’ go back to an actual office, they are commonly used as respectful terms of address even if the addressee is neither a village headman nor the descendant of one. Names meaning ‘scholar’, ‘expert’, ‘teacher’, and so on are also quite common: Acharya ‘preceptor’, Bhattacharya ‘learned preceptor’, Jani ‘learned one’, and Upadhyay ‘teacher’.

In many parts of India, men are respectfully addressed as ‘father’ or ‘brother’ and women as ‘mother’ or ‘sister’. These terms are then regularly attached to personal names, as in the case of Gujarati bhai ‘brother’, ben ‘sister’; Kannada appa ‘father’, aṅṅa ‘older brother’, amma ‘mother’, akka ‘older sister’; Marathi dada ‘older brother’, bai ‘older sister’; and bābū ‘father’ in several Indo-European languages of the Indic group. Occasionally, such attachments have evolved as separate family names. Thus, for example, Gujarati women who use no surname sometimes give Ben as their ‘last name’. This cannot be considered a true family name because it is not passed on from one generation to another. However, Babu and Dada have become inherited family names. Although the Tamil family names Iyer and Iyengar evolved from names of communities, they go back to a term of address, Dravidian ayya ‘father, lord’.

Some Hindu family names are epithets of Hindu gods: Kumar, an epithet of Kartikeya, son of the god Shiva; Lal, an epithet of the god Krishna; Narayan, of the god Vishnu; Ram, an incarnation of Vishnu; and Basu, an epithet of Shiva and also of several other gods. These usually go back to ancestral personal names, since epithets of deities are commonly used for personal names. Because many personal names from southern India have been taken as family names in Britain, family names that are epithets of deities are very common among immigrants from that region.

Some names denoting animals or plants seem to have totemic significance. Examples include Apte from apṭa ‘the plant Bauhinia tomentosa’ and More from mor ‘peacock’.

14.4.1.3 Origins of Indian names within the southern tradition

In southern India, the last of a person’s names in the normal order of citation is usually not a family name but the personal name of the individual. The first name may be an ancestral personal name, an ancestral place name, or the father’s personal name. In some cases, the father’s personal name appears as the middle name. Many people have no middle name and use only the father’s personal name (patronymic) as the first name; that is, they have no inherited family name.

People originating from southern India who live abroad may reorder their names in line with local (e.g. British) tradition, writing the personal name first and the Indian ‘first name’, as just defined, last. Those who have come to use the father’s personal name as the last name use it as their children’s last name as well, thus converting it into a true surname. As a result, many personal names of southern India—such as Krishna, Krishnan, Narayanan, Raghavan, Raja, Rajan, Srinivasan, and the European Joseph, Matthew, and Philip—have become family names.

Some people with the southern Indian pattern of family-name placement have come to use an additional surname that is placed in the final position. In such cases, the surname placed initially is usually an ancestral personal name (as specified above) or an ancestral place name, whereas the surname placed finally is a title or a name that indicates community or clan. For example, Telugu-speaking people from Andhra Pradesh with common surnames like Naidoo and Reddy, or Konkani-speaking people from Karnataka with surnames like Kamath, Pai, and Shenoy often have another surname, placed initially, that refers to their ancestral place.

14.4.2 JAINISM

Jainism is one of the most ancient religions of India. Its origins are lost in Indian prehistory. The religion had its heyday in India in the 6th century BC, but it is still adhered to by at least six million people, mainly in northern India. It is estimated that there are about 25,000 Jains in modern Britain. Most of their family names, such as Gupta and Parekh, are identical to Hindu names (especially those of the Vania, Bania, and Lohana jatis), but a few are distinctively or predominantly Jain, for example Sanghvi and the so far unexplained name Gala.

14.4.3 SIKHISM

Sikhs, in addition to their given name, use either a surname or a so-called khalsa name, or both; and if both, then in the order khalsa name + surname, e.g. Samdip Singh Atwal. The khalsa name is the name adopted on religious initiation, and traditionally this has always been Singh (the usual spelling in Britain; etymologically ‘lion’, with the transferred sense ‘hero’) for a man, and Kaur (etymologically ‘princess’) for a woman. Sikh women do not change their surname on marriage. Many British Sikhs have adopted the khalsa names (especially, of course, the male Singh) as inheritable surnames, though both are found also among Hindus (Kshatriyas). The traditional surname may be an inherited family name or a clan or caste name. Only about 200 Sikh family names in Britain are not also found in the Hindu community; these include Atwal, Chahal, and Johal, which are all Jat clan names. Sikh surnames are all either demonstrably formed in Panjabi, or, especially if clan names, have not received a satisfactory etymological explanation.

14.4.4 BUDDHISM

Few family names represented in Britain can be shown to be exclusively Buddhist; these, however, include Ratnayake and Seneviratne (Sinhalese; from Sri Lanka) and Ladak (derived from the Tibetan regional name Ladakh; from Kashmir).

14.4.5 PARSI

Distinctively Parsi surnames in Britain are few. Most of these are of Gujarati origin and shared with Hindus (Mehta, Modi, Shroff), and many of these also with Jains; some are shared but of unknown origin (Bulsara, Gara); but some which are truly exclusive to Parsis are formed in English (Contractor, Engineer). The majority of the Parsi names whose origin is known, in whatever language, are occupational or status names.

14.4.6 ISLAM

There are approximately 2.7 million Muslims in Britain, of whom approximately 1.7 million have their ancestral roots in Pakistan or Bangladesh. Many of the former are from the Mirpur region of Pakistani Kashmir, where the dominant language is the Mirpuri dialect of Panjabi, and most of the latter are from the Sylhet region, where the Sylheti dialect of Bengali predominates. Most Muslims have names formulated in the classical form of Arabic, though some dialectal forms can be found. Accordingly, many Pakistani and Bangladeshi family names are indistinguishable from other Muslim names adopted from the Arabic naming system. Some family names in Britain may be regarded as typically Bangladeshi, for example Lalani, Miah, and Chaudhari. Significantly, none of these derive from Arabic; all are from Urdu or Bengali. In this introduction, the Muslim naming system and its Arabic foundation are treated as a matter independent of the subcontinent (see section 15).

14.4.7 IMPORTED SURNAMES IN INDIA

As outlined above, Indian family names are found among both Hindus and other religious groups: Christian, Jain, Muslim, Parsi, and Sikh. In many regions of India Jain, Parsi, and Sikh family names are often indistinguishable from Hindu family names. Many Christians, however, have European family names, especially in southern India. Christians whose ancestors were converted by the Portuguese have Portuguese family names, which are believed to have come from the godfathers of the initial converts. Anglo-Indian Christians usually have British family names. Some Jains have what appear to be English family names (e.g. Engineer), which were created as family names in India and are therefore culturally Indian rather than imports. Christians of southern India, like other people in the south, often use no family names but place their father’s personal names before their own personal names. Some use the father’s name as their last name, which in the English-speaking world may come to be used as an inheritable family name.

15. The Arabic and Muslim naming system

Classical Arabic is the language of the Qur’an, the sacred book of Islam, and many millions of Arabic speakers are Muslims by religion. But, in addition, sizeable minorities of people can be found in most Arabic-speaking countries who are not Muslims. Precise figures are impossible to obtain, but it is estimated that at least 35 per cent of the population of Lebanon, 10 per cent of Syrians, 8 per cent of Jordanians, 10 per cent of Egyptians, 8 per cent of Palestinians, and 3 per cent of Iraqis are—or rather, were—members of one or other of the Christian sects of the region, before the recent flights, expulsions, and massacres in Iraq and Syria in particular. Altogether, up to 2010, approximately 5 per cent of Arabic speakers were Christians, while a further 2 per cent represented an indigenous Jewish population (some of whom came as refugees to the English-speaking world, establishing an additional thread in the family-name inventories of Britain, America, and elsewhere). Among people who have emigrated from the Middle East, there are many Druze and Christian Arabs, particularly from the Levant (Syria and Lebanon, Jordan and Palestine). Christians have also come in large numbers from Iraq and Egypt. Jews from the Arab world have also uprooted themselves, or been uprooted, and settled abroad.

The other side of the coin is that Islam is a world religion. Therefore, in addition to being the faith of many Arabic speakers, it is also that of millions of people whose native language is not Arabic. All of this affects the choice and usage of names. Clearly, it would be an error to assume that everyone bearing an Arabic name must be a Muslim. Arabic names are borne also by Christians, Druze, and Jews, and by some people of other faiths such as Yazidis. Conversely, it would be equally erroneous to assume that a person whose name has clear Muslim connotations is necessarily an Arabic speaker. Muslims, even those who are not native Arabic speakers, regard it as a religious duty to learn classical Arabic so that they can understand the meaning of their daily prayers and read the Qur'an in the original. Furthermore, they generally choose names that have positive connotations in Islam, typically Arabic names based on attributes of Allah or on the names borne by the Prophet Muhammad, his family, his associates, and his successors. For this reason, a Muslim personal name is not always a good indicator of the national or ethnic origins of its bearer. For example, the name of a person called Abdulaziz ('Abd al-'Azīz 'servant of the Mighty') tells us that he is almost certainly of Muslim faith, but his name gives no clue as to whether he or his forebears come from an Arabic-speaking country, from the Indian subcontinent, or elsewhere. Pronunciation differences that may be heard in the spoken form of a name, and which may serve for regional or national identification, are not often reflected in its written forms.

The policy of FaNBI is that, if a name is used by Christian and other non-Muslim Arabic speakers, the label Arabic is used. On the other hand, if a name is used by non-Arabic speakers as well as Arabic speakers, the label Muslim is used. It must be admitted, however, that there are many cases where the evidence is inconclusive; in such cases, we have made a judgement based on the balance of probability. Given names (asmā') such as Fadi 'redeemer', Isa 'Jesus', Hanna 'John', and Boutros 'Peter' are preferred by Christian Arabs, although even here there may be no clear-cut distinctions. For example, one might assume that Musa 'Moses' and Ibrahim 'Abraham' are Jewish names, but this would be wrong, for in fact these names are also popular among Muslims, Christians, and Druze. Isa is clearly a Christian name, but it is also used by Muslims, for Jesus is also regarded as a prophet in Islam. The complexity of these issues, which require much more detailed exposition, lie outside the scope of the present work; they can only be touched on here.

There are slightly different traditions of naming within Islam, mainly due to the division between the two main branches, Sunni and Shia. About 90 per cent of Muslims are Sunnis (from Arabic Ahl as-Sunnah 'people of the tradition', i.e. those with traditional understanding of Muhammad's teachings recorded outside the Qur'an). This branch, which defines itself as orthodox, dominates in the western Muslim lands, in particular the Arabian peninsula, Egypt, Turkey, and Algeria. The Shia (Shī'ah, originally Shī'atu 'Alī 'the partisans of Ali, the fourth "rightly guided" khalif') predominate in Iran and Azerbaijan and constitute substantial minorities in India, Yemen, Iraq, Syria, and elsewhere. Differences in selection of given names reflect the fact that the sectarian division hinges on the accession of a khalif (Arabic khalifah 'successor [of Muhammad]') in the 7th century. Sunnis insisted on an elected khalif, while Shia insisted on a family member of the Prophet, namely his son-in-law Ali. Accordingly, for example, Omar and Abu Bakr are typically names of Sunnis, whilst Ali and Hassan are typically Shia. Other surnames may be characteristic of one or the other branch through historical accident; in Iraq, for example, where both branches are represented, Pachachi tends to be a Sunni name, whilst Chalabi tends to be Shia.

15.1 The Arabic language

Arabic is sixth on the list of most widely spoken native languages in the world; it is the principal language of eighteen countries, with a combined population of almost 200 million. Arabic became an official language of the United Nations and some of its organs and committees in stages between 1973 and 1982. Historically speaking, it is a Semitic language, related to Hebrew, Amharic, Berber, and certain other languages of North Africa and the Middle East. Arabic words are composed of two elements: the consonantal root and the vowel pattern. The root typically consists of three consonants, giving the underlying basic meaning of the word; the pattern consists of vowels inserted between and around the consonants, giving a specific lexical meaning and grammatical form to the word in particular contexts. Thus the root s-l-m has the underlying meaning 'peace'. With differing vowel patterns, salām means 'peace and security' or 'safety'; salīm means 'secure, perfect, faultless'; aslām means 'more, most perfect'; islām is 'submission (specifically, to the will of God)'; muslim denotes an adherent of Islam. These different patterns are often reflected in the variety of Arabic names that may be based on the same root.

15.2 The Arabic naming system

Naming conventions in the Arabic-speaking Muslim world are not as cut and dried as they are in the West. All Arab children receive a given name. Their second name comes from the first name of their father. The complexity begins with the third element of the name, which may span five or more elements, as described below, as in the case of the royal known in the West fully as Abdulaziz ibn Abdul Rahman ibn Faisal ibn Turki ibn Abdullah ibn Muhammad Al-Saud (locally more often 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn 'Abd ar-Rahman 'Āl Sa'ūd'). For many Arabs, the given name of the paternal grandfather is taken as an individual's third name, and it often serves as the surname. As an example, if parents name a child Jamīla, and the father's first name is 'Ali', and the paternal grandfather's first name is Husayn, then the full name which might appear on official documents is Jamīla 'Ali Husayn. Other Arabs, however, embrace the concept of an inherited family surname. In this system, the child might be named Jamīla 'Ali al-Maṣrī, where al-Maṣrī 'the Egyptian' is in effect a family name.

The entries for Muslim and Arabic names in this dictionary represent adaptations of different parts of standard Arabic names, as described below, insofar as a family name is a conventional and bureaucratic requirement. Any one or more of the five standard elements of a traditional Arabic name may be pressed into service as a modern family name among immigrants from the Arabic-speaking world: the kunya, ism, nasab, nisba, and laqab. Those chosen in this way tend eventually to acquire hereditary status.

Standard Arabic personal names consist of up to five elements. A person might be known by any one of these elements or by combinations of them. The five elements (in the order in which they are used if they are combined) are as follows:

- kunya: the kunya is a kind of nickname, formed with abū ‘father of’ or umm ‘mother of’. So, for example, the Prophet Muhammad was known by the kunya Abū Qasem ‘father of Qasem’, and Qasem was indeed the name of his son. But a kunya could be and often was conventionalized: a childless person or a newborn child could be given a kunya. The Prophet’s wife Ayesha was known by the kunya Umm ‘Abdullah ‘mother of Abdullah’, although she was in fact childless. In Iran, a kunya is often metaphorical or aspirational rather than literal, as in the kunya Abū-l Fad ‘father of bounty’ (i.e. endowed with bounty). In the Indian subcontinent the kunya is used only informally and literally within the family circle, with reference to an actually extant child.
- ism: the ism is an individual’s personal name or given name. Asmā’ (the plural of ism) are taken freely from vocabulary words in Arabic, and may be nouns, verbs, or adjectives (including both base forms such as Ḥamid ‘praised or praiseworthy’ and comparative/superlative forms such as Aḥmad ‘more/most praised’). An ism may be used with or without the definite article al-. Abstract nouns are common (e.g. Naṣr ‘victory’, Tawfiq ‘success, prosperity’, Iqbal ‘good fortune’), while words denoting features of the natural world (e.g. Suḥa ‘star’) are also popular. Asmā’ deriving from inflected verbs include Yazīd ‘he increases’ and Ya’ish ‘he lives’. Among Muslims, an ism may be chosen with reference to a noted figure in Muslim history: Muḥammad, the name of the messenger of Allah to whom the Qur’an was revealed, remains the most popular choice among Muslim parents for a baby boy, while Fatima, the name of Muhammad’s favourite daughter, is a popular choice for girls. Important sources of Muslim asmā’ are the ninety-nine attributes of Allah (sometimes called ‘names’) mentioned in the Qur’an and the Hadith, the record of sayings attributed to Muhammad. According to Islamic belief, the relationship between humans and their creator is that of servants to their master. Many Muslims bear a name denoting a servant of one of the attributes of Allah, such as ‘Abd al-Qādir ‘servant of the Capable’ or ‘Abd al-Karim ‘servant of the Generous’. The Hadith says: “The best names in the sight of God are ‘Abdullah “servant of God” and ‘Abd ar-Rahman “servant of the Merciful”.”
- nasab: the nasab is a patronymic (e.g. ibn Sa’ūd, ibn al-Khattāb), expressing the relationship of a son (ibn) or daughter (bint) usually to his or her father, but sometimes to a more distant forebear. Thus, occasionally a nasab could be hereditary for some generations, especially in the case of descendants of a famous forebear. In some cases, a person’s nasab is metronymic, especially if the mother was remarkable in some way. Generally, the reference of the nasab is to the father’s ism, but sometimes it may be to his kunya (e.g. ‘Ali ibn Abū Ṭālib, literally ‘Ali the son of the father of Talib’), or to his laqab (see below) (e.g. Muhammad ibn as-Siddiq ‘Muhammad, son of [the man known as] the Righteous’, Dima bint az-Zayyat ‘Dima, daughter of the oil merchant’; the name al-Khattab above is derived from a nickname, ‘the sermon, the narration from a book’). The nasab could also be iterated (e.g. Salamah ibn ‘Amr ibn al-Akwa ‘Salamah son of ‘Amr, son of al-Akwa’) in the manner found in other cultures with a tradition of lengthy oral genealogies, such as the Irish (see section 5).

- nisba: the nisba is a locative name, generally from the name of the person’s birthplace, residence, or place where the family originated (e.g. al-Hashimi, al-Qurayshi).
- laqab: the laqab is a distinguishing nickname, which may refer to a physical characteristic (e.g. al-Aswad ‘the Black’, al-Aṣamm ‘the Deaf’). Names of animals and birds of prey are common (e.g. al-Asad and al-Haydar, both meaning ‘the Lion’, al-Fand ‘the Cheetah’, al-Uqāb ‘the Eagle’); such words can also be used as an ism. A laqab may also be an anecdotal nickname; according to Schimmel (1989), a Moroccan politician who habitually interrupted people with the phrase jīj kelmat ‘just a couple of words’ received this expression as his laqab. The laqab could also be an honorific or complimentary epithet (e.g. al-Hajji ‘the person who has performed the hajj (pilgrimage to Mecca)’; an-Nasif ‘the Just, the Fair-minded’; as-Siddiq ‘the Truthful’). Another kind of laqab is an occupational term (e.g. al-Khayyat ‘the Tailor’, al-Haddad ‘the Smith’, al-Khayyām ‘the Tentmaker’).

The elements of this naming system are used, with variations, throughout the Arabic-speaking world and in other Muslim countries. The different elements are used in different social contexts, and conventions vary from country to country. For example, in Arab countries, the kunya may be used among a wide circle of friends and may be the standard form of address for an individual by friends, whereas in the Indian subcontinent it is used informally only in family circles, and does not count as part of a family name. The ism is used only among family and intimates, and it is generally a breach of etiquette for an outsider to address a person by his or her ism alone. Famous people are known to history by more or less arbitrary combinations of the ism with the kunya, nasab, nisba, and/or laqab. Name elements including the phrases ud-Dīn ‘of the Faith’, ad-Dawla ‘of the State’, al-Islām ‘of Islam’, and al-Mulk ‘of the Kingdom’ are examples of a specific type of honorific, used almost exclusively by sultans, qazis, and others of high rank.

In some Muslim countries, legislation was passed in the 20th century to make family names a legal requirement. The best-known example is Turkey (see section 17), where family names were required by a law passed in 1934. In Egypt, a similar law was enacted as recently as 1970. Developments in Egypt are too recent to have had a major effect on family names among immigrant populations.

15.3 Arabic and its relations with other languages of the Muslim world

As mentioned above, Arabic is not the only language of the Muslim world, though it has had a profound influence on the naming practices of other Muslim communities. From its origin in the Arabian Peninsula in the 7th century AD, Islam proselytized and spread rapidly. To the west, it spread along the southern shores of the Mediterranean. In the countries of north-west Africa, Arabic found itself in competition with Berber and French. Arabic names are found in combination with French given names among people from Algeria and Morocco, as well as Lebanon and Syria, all former French colonies or protectorates.

Islam crossed the Sahara Desert and became the established religion of the Hausa people in northern Nigeria and of certain other peoples whose homelands cross modern political borders in West Africa, such as the Fulani and Wolof. It also spread down the coast of East Africa, especially in Somalia, having considerable influence culturally in coastal cities such as Zanzibar and Mombasa and linguistically on the development of (Ki)swahili.

To the east, Islam spread to Persia (Iran) in AD 642 (only ten years after the Prophet's death). From there it continued to spread rapidly northward through the Caucasus and across central Asia, and eastward to the Indian subcontinent. In the 16th century, the Mughal Empire was established in India, with Islam as its main religion. Some of the princely states of India had already adopted Islam as their main religion, while others remained Hindu. In 1947, India was partitioned and the new Islamic state of Pakistan was created. The main and official language of Pakistan is Urdu, an Indic language with a strong admixture of both Arabic and Persian vocabulary. Other languages of Pakistan include Pashto (also spoken in Afghanistan), Panjabi, Baluchi, and Sindhi. In 1972, the new state of Bangladesh (formerly East Pakistan) was formed. Here the language is Bengali. However, in both Pakistan and Bangladesh, and indeed elsewhere in the Indian subcontinent, Muslim personal names are characteristically Arabic in style, but with many Persian elements. Further east still, Islam is the main religion in Malaysia and Indonesia, and there are even Muslim communities in western China. But these have had no discernible distinctive effect (we find Malay or Indonesian Bobat and Lambat, neither of Arabic origin) on family names in Britain and Ireland.

From the 8th to the 13th centuries, much of Spain was a Muslim country, under the rule of Moors, who originally entered Europe from North Africa. This was a period noted for its cultural and scientific achievements and for its religious tolerance. Although the Moors were driven from Spain in the 13th to 15th centuries, Arabic left substantial traces on Spanish vocabulary (about 8 per cent is of Arabic origin, e.g. alguacil 'bailiff', naranja 'orange'), place-names (Gibraltar, Jaén), and surnames (Almunia, Medina).

In Europe, Albania and Bosnia are still home to substantial indigenous Muslim communities, a legacy of the days when the Ottoman Empire extended westward over Greece and much of the Balkans. The family name of the first president of independent Bosnia and Herzegovina, Alija Izetbegović, is a good example of the interculturalization of naming: it contains the Arabic personal name derived from izzat 'honour, respect' in a turkicized form, the traditional Ottoman Turkish honorific bey (Old Turkic beg), and the Serbo-Croatian patronymic suffix -(o)vić 'son of'.

16. Iranian family names in Britain

There are estimated to be about 83,000 people of Iranian extraction in Britain, most of whom are members of families that arrived as refugees from the revolution of 1979. Iran (otherwise known as Persia) did not use inheritable surnames at all before 1919, when they were introduced by law, in the same westernizing spirit as developments in Turkey at about the same time (see section 17). The practice was extended during the reign of Reza Shah (1925–41). Under the influence of Islam, since the adoption of surnames, Ahmadi, which is Arabic in form and Muslim in import, has become the most frequent surname, and others of Arabic origin exist in persianized form, e.g. Sadeghi from Siddiqi.

Iranian surnames are often distinctive for, although Iran is a traditionally Muslim country, its language, Persian (widely known as Farsi), is an Indo-European language unrelated to Arabic. It is related to Sanskrit and the modern languages of Pakistan and northern India. It is written using Arabic script and has absorbed many Arabic words. Both historically and in modern times, Persian has been the most influential language in the Muslim world after Arabic. When Islam arrived in Persia within ten years of Muhammad's death in AD 632, it brought with it the Arabic naming system, and many names themselves were formed in Arabic. Since the Islamic conquest, some names in Iran have been borrowed from Arabic, although most are of Persian language origin. Many of the latter come from Ferdowsi's book Shahnameh ('The Epic of Kings'), dating from the 10th century and considered to be the masterpiece of Persian literature. Approximately 10 to 15 per cent of all Persian given names are taken from characters mentioned in Shahnameh, for example Farhad, Javed, and Rustom, which are now found as surnames in Britain (Farhad in its Turkish form Farhat), while some surnames are derived by suffixation from the names of such characters, e.g. Bahrami, Yazdani. These are now finding their way into surnames of patronymic origin.

In some cases specifically Persian forms of Arabic names adopted early in the history of Islam have subsequently spread, for example Afzal (Arabic form: Afdal) 'best' or 'learned', Fazel (Arabic form Fazil) 'favour' or 'grace', Reza (Arabic form Riqā) 'contentment, satisfaction', no doubt in part owing to the fame throughout the Muslim world of individuals bearing these names, such as the 12th-century grand vizier Afzal Shahanshah. These can also now find their way into the store of Iranian surnames of patronymic origin.

Just as in the traditional Arabic naming system (see section 15.2) any vocabulary word (in theory) could be adopted as a personal name (ism), so now Muslims throughout the world (but especially in Persia and India, and the modern countries of Pakistan and Bangladesh) were able to choose not only from Arabic but also from Persian words for their names. Names of Persian etymology were added to the standard inventory of Muslim names, for example Akhtar (from akhtar 'star, fortune, good luck'), Azad

(from āzād ‘freedom’), Firdous (from firdaws ‘paradise’), Jahangir (from jahangir ‘world conqueror’), Javed (from jāved ‘eternal’), Khurshid (from khūrshīd ‘sun’), Nariman (‘light’ + ‘faith’), Parveen (from parvīn ‘the Pleiades [star cluster]’), and Shahzad (from shāhzāda ‘prince’). Bostan is a female name from bustān ‘garden’. Surnames that appear to enshrine ordinary words of Persian will generally have been in previous use as given names. Names of Persian origin spread because of the religious and political sway and the cultural dominance of Persian dynasties beyond Persia. In their modern form, therefore, such names are not necessarily those of Iranians but may have been adopted by other Muslims, especially in Mughal India (see section 15.3). They may accordingly find their way into patronymics and thence into surnames of relationship. Specifically Farsi patronymics are formed using the suffix -zadeh ‘son of’, as in Alizadeh.

Family names that have origins other than in patronymics are relatively rare. They include tribal names (e.g. Jamshidi); locative names (adjectival forms of the name of their place of origin, e.g. Bukhari, Irani, Taheri, and Tehrani, whether this place was in Persia or elsewhere, e.g. one of the areas of central Asia speaking a related Indo-Iranian language such as Tajik); occupational or status names (e.g. Arbab ‘landlord’); and nicknames (e.g. Rouhani ‘spiritual’, Taghvaei ‘virtue’).

17. Turkish family names in Britain

It is estimated that approximately 500,000 people in modern Britain are of Turkish origin. Of these around 300,000 come from Cyprus. Almost all these families arrived in Britain during the 20th century, especially after 1945. Immigration from Cyprus was facilitated by the fact that Cyprus was part of the British Empire, in various administrative guises, from 1878 to 1960, and accelerated by the ethnic strife on that island between Greek and Turkish speakers during the second half of the 20th century. These Turkish immigrants had Turkish-language names. But until 1934 there were no Turkish family names as such (i.e. there were no hereditary family names used in addition to given names).

Turkey’s predecessor state, the Ottoman Empire, lasted for 623 years, from 1299 to 1922. From its foundation in central Anatolia, it expanded rapidly. In 1453 Sultan Mehmet II seized the Greek city of Constantinople (Byzantium) and established in its place the Islamic, Turkish city of Istanbul, which was to serve as the Ottoman capital for 470 years. By 1683 the Ottoman Empire extended over most of south-eastern Europe, including Greece and the Balkans, and stretched from Baghdad in the east to Algiers in the west. These facts had an important impact on personal names and naming practices in these regions. They explain, for example, why many present-day family names in Bosnia (e.g. Begović) and Albania (e.g. Ahmeti) have a Turkish etymology. The religion of the Ottoman Empire was Islam, but its official and administrative language was Turkish rather than Arabic. It should be noted in passing that by today’s standards there was remarkable tolerance of other religions, notably Judaism and Christianity, in the Ottoman Empire.

Given Turkey’s Islamic history, it is not surprising that the traditional naming system in Turkish is somewhat similar to the Arabic naming system (see section 15.2), though with fewer complications. Turks have one or more given name (isim, a Turkish form of Arabic ism, or ad, a traditional Turkic word of pre-Islamic origin), and a family name (soyadı). Many Turkish given names are derived from Arabic and are associated with Islam. Others are much older, and many of these are shared with other Turkic languages such as Azerbaijani. Just as in European languages, many Turkish family names are derived from such given names, while others are taken from place-names or vocabulary words. Family names with a Turkic etymology can in many cases be associated with pre-Islamic legends and mythology.

The very recent origins of family names in modern Turkey mean that people seeking information about a Turkish family name in Britain must look back to the usage of Turkish and Arabic words and names in the Ottoman Empire. An individual was known primarily by his given name. This was often used in combination with an honorific or a descriptor with honorific overtones, such as the male title of respect bey ‘official’ (female Begüm, originally for a bey’s wife; e.g. Mehmet bey) or uzun ‘tall’ (e.g. Uzun Hasan ‘Hasan the tall’), or an adjectival or genitival modifier denoting his place of birth (e.g. Ankaralı Kemal ‘Kemal from Ankara’ or Köşelerin ‘of from the corners’), or an additional birth name without a patronymic suffix (e.g. Ahmet Riza), or a patronymic (e.g. Hasanoğlu Yusuf ‘Yusuf son of Hasan’). Such descriptive epithets form the basis of the family-name system introduced in 1934.

The law enacted by the reformer and first president of modern Turkey, Mustafa Kemal Atatürk (1881–1934), one of whose goals was to europeanize Turkey, stipulated that all Turkish citizens must adopt an inheritable family name. Atatürk’s own surname, which means ‘father of the Turks’, was bestowed on him that year by act of the Turkish parliament, while being forbidden to all other Turkish citizens. This law had at least two noticeable effects. In the first place, the range of sources from which family names could be taken was very wide, possibly even wider than the range of possibilities in Ottoman times, including not only traditional Turkish given names but also place-names, features of the landscape, and almost any word from the general vocabulary of the Turkish language, and including some assertive and assertively nationalistic creations. They include Gül ‘rose’ (see Gul), Kaya ‘stone’, Akçura ‘crescent’ (an Islamic symbol), Erdoğan ‘[one] who is born a brave man, a soldier or warrior’ (see Erdoğan), Demirel ‘iron hand’, Öztürk ‘genuine Turk’ (see Ozturk), and Özil ‘genuine land’. As a result, there are now a very large number of rather rare and recent family names in Turkey, many of them used only by one family. Current examples of the usual categories of family names are Hikmet, from the male given name of the same form, and Kerimoğlu with a patronymic suffix (relationship names), Tüfekçi ‘gunsmith’ (occupational name), Karatay (locative name from a town in Konya province), and Küçük ‘little’ (nickname). The last category was, as examples above indicate, widely exploited in the reforms of the 1930s. The second noticeable effect was that, although family names were acquired by all Turks, these surnames are rarely used outside official and legal contexts. The usual way of addressing or referring to a man continued and continues to be use of the honorific term bey after the given name, as for example Mehmet bey.

Turkish Cypriots, who were never formally subject to Atatürk's reforms, tend to bear the traditional type of family name of patronymic origin derived from Turkish or Arabic (Muslim) given names or the same but with the suffix -oğlu. Others have what are originally locative bynames, for example Karpazlı, denoting someone from the Karpasia peninsula in north-eastern Cyprus.

There is no authoritative dictionary of Turkish family names, and the best available information is contained in Dictionary of American Family Names (Hanks 2003a). Most are transparent, as would be expected in a situation where most surnames were created and adopted less than a century ago.

18. Greek family names in Britain<sup>7</sup>

Many names of Greek origin are found in Britain today, mostly as a result of the immigration of Greek-speaking Cypriots in the latter half of the 20th century, especially after the independence of Cyprus from the British Empire in 1960, and again after the invasion by Turkey in 1974. There was also immigration of Turkish Cypriots in the 1950s and 1960s following intercommunal violence, but overall Greek immigration was on a larger scale. There are some 80,000 people of Cypriot origin in the United Kingdom at present. It is hard to disentangle how many of these are of Greek descent, and how many of Turkish, Armenian, or Maronite background. In the 2001 census, there were about twice as many Cypriots all told as people originating from Greece.

Given the fairly large number of non-Cypriot Greeks in the United Kingdom, the entire background of Greek surnaming is presented here, despite the relatively limited range of types found in Cypriot names (largely old genitive formations in -ou, e.g. Petrou, Theodoulou); all the other linguistic types are represented to a certain degree as a result of the lesser flow of Greek speakers from the mainland of Greece and the islands, and it is desirable to set the Cypriot names in their historical and linguistic context.

In antiquity, free male Greeks were identified by a proper name, a patronymic, and sometimes by their tribe or native region. A free married woman was identified by the name of her husband rather than that of her father. For example, an Athenian man might be identified as Sokrates the son of Sophroniskos of the deme (district) of Alopeke, or an Athenian woman as Alkimache wife of Kallimakhos of Anagyrous. The Roman practice of taking cognomens and surnames (nomina) did not catch on among Greek speakers during classical times.

Hereditary family names as we understand them today became common in Byzantium in the 10th century AD, slightly earlier than in most other parts of Europe but contemporarily with such names in Ireland. Initially, surnames were predominantly derived from places of habitation, nicknames, or occupations. Thus, the imperial family of the Komnenoi took its name from the city of Komne in Asia Minor, and that of the Laskares from a Persian word for 'warrior', ultimately of Arabic origin. The surname of the Palaiologoi is derived from the words palaios 'old' and -logos

'collector', and it probably meant not 'antiquarian' but 'garbage collector', although the first Palaiologos we know of was already governor of Thessalonika. This Palaiologos (the father of Emperor Michael VIII, reigned 1259–82) had a triple surname typical of nobles of his time eager to establish their aristocratic credentials: Andronikos Dukas Komnenos Palaiologos. Commoners made do with single family names. Among Byzantine intellectuals, Michael Psellos's surname means 'stutterer', while Demetrios Kydones's surname means 'quince'.

18.1 Christianity and Greek naming

In the first millennium AD, the Greek language was intimately connected with the rise of Christianity. Greek is the original language of the New Testament, and the Greek forms of names such as Peter, Paul, Mark, Matthew, Luke, John, and Mary have had far-reaching influence on naming practices throughout Europe and elsewhere: thousands of European family names are derived from the Greek forms of these seven personal names.

In many Christian cultures, it was obligatory to select the name of a newborn child from a fairly small inventory of saints' names approved by the Church; these later became the foundation for a vast array of European patronymic surnames. Although some saints' names demonstrate continuity with the pagan past (e.g., Isidore 'gift of Isis', or Theresa 'hunting', originally associated with the goddess Artemis), most of them break with the past, some being Semitic in origin, some allusions to Christian history and legend (Christopher), or in some cases novel coinages (Spyridon). Differences among saints' cults account for the greater frequency in the Orthodox domain—Greece, Serbia, Bulgaria, Romania, and Russia—of family names based on Greek Demetrios, Theodoros, Konstantinos, Athanasios, Vasilios (Basil), and so on, as well as Orthodox-specific cultic names such as Stavros from the Holy Cross, or Panagiotis from an epithet of the Virgin Mary meaning 'all-holy'. In Greece itself, accordingly, these religious names are the foundation for a large number of family names.

18.2 The rise of Greek patronymics

The major change in Greek family names since Byzantine times has been a massive infusion of patronymic surnames. Many of these originated as late as the 19th century. In fact, patronymic suffixes were widely added to family names of other origins, especially in the case of suffixes that were strongly associated with a particular region. It is often possible to tell from the patronymic suffix of a family name which region of Greece someone's male lineage is most likely to be from. There are two reasons for this. The first is that patronymic suffixes are usually diminutives, and these vary from dialect to dialect. The second is that patronymic suffixes were always subject to fashion and peer pressure, particularly after this was reinforced by the standardizing influence of universal education. For example, the archaic patronymic suffix -idis was adopted by Black Sea Greeks on resettling in Greece, ostensibly to replace the Turkish-sounding surnames some of them had; however, it was adopted even by Black Sea Greeks whose surnames did not end in a suffix derived from Turkish -oğlu, and often by those whose surnames had no Turkish component at all. Perhaps the most extreme example is that of Crete, where the patronymic suffix -akis is found in the surnames of up to 95 per cent of the population in some districts. Before the 19th century, this suffix was unknown in Crete, where typical surnames were Italian, nickname-based, or occupational, or used other patronymic suffixes. The ending -akis swept through Crete uniformly, forming Linardakis from Linardos ‘Leonard’, Lykakis from Lykos ‘wolf’, and Mastorakis from Mastoras ‘craftsman’. This pervasive change in naming practices was accelerated by the fact that education in the Greek language became widely available in the early 19th century. Family-name changes were often the prerogative of the child’s schoolmaster, rather than of the parents. Similar distinctive regional suffixes are -idis/-adis (Asia Minor), -antis (Black Sea), -atos (Cephalonia, Ithaca), -eas, -akos (Mani), -elis (Lesbos), -oudis (Macedonia, Thrace, Aegean Islands), -ousis (Chios), -oglou (Asia Minor), -opoulos (Peloponnese), and genitive or possessive forms (typically -ou, as in Cyprus). The last of these remains the form which is most prominent in Greek family names found in England.

18.3 Greek names from other languages

The various ethnicities that have contributed to the present-day population of Greece have had a considerable effect on the development of modern Greek family names. An extensive presence of Italian family names resulted from the long rule of parts of the Greek-speaking world by Venetians, from the 13th to the 17th or 18th century. The Venetian domain included Crete, much of the Aegean (the remainder being held by other Italian states), the Ionian Islands, and coastal cities in the Peloponnese. Common Greek family names of Italian origin include Typaldos, Zevgolis, Vitalis, Dandolos, and Negrepontis.

The Turkish contribution to Greek family names is extensive, especially in providing vocabulary words on which surnames were based. Ottoman Turkish, with its significant Arabic and Persian components, had a serious impact on the vocabulary of Greek in general, once Greek-speaking lands passed from the Byzantine Empire or the Italian maritime states to the Ottoman Empire; this transfer took place from the 14th to the 17th century and remained in effect until the 19th to early 20th centuries. In effect, the Ottoman Empire became the successor state to Byzantium, governing not only the bulk of the Greek-speaking world (including the western and northern coasts of Asia Minor), but also the rest of the Balkans. Greek family names from Turkish vocabulary words are often occupational, e.g. Kavafis ‘cobbler’, Kazandzis/Kazantzakis ‘cauldron-maker’, or nicknames, formed with the productive prefixes Kara- ‘black, dark, moody’, Deli- ‘crazy’, and Hatzi- ‘pilgrim’.

Other non-Greek contributions to Greek family names come from three populations who have a long history of cohabitation with ethnic Greeks. There is a slight presence of Slavic family names among Greeks, particularly in Greek Macedonia. The main contributions from ethnic minorities come from the Arvanites and the Vlachs. The Arvanites are descendants of Albanians who settled in central Greece from the 14th century onwards. The Vlachs or Aromanians are a traditionally nomadic people living throughout the southern Balkans and speaking a language related to Romanian (see Vlachos). Both populations have been assimilated in language and ethnic consciousness to Greece, but in many cases they retain their non-Hellenic family names.

18.4 The formation of modern Greek family names

There has long been extensive pressure in Greece for people to hellenize their names (put them into a Greek form) in order to conform to the Greek ideal of nation-building; this pressure was strongly felt in particular by refugees from Asia Minor, who hellenized their family names even when they were not conspicuously Turkish-sounding, as mentioned above. Hellenization as a conscious strategy also means that the morphology of Greek family names—the components and the way they are combined—is almost always archaic, since that is the form recorded by Greek state institutions, which were long opposed to the use of the modern vernacular (Dhimotiki), advocating instead the use of Katharevousa, an artificial language modelled on classical Greek. For example, surnames based on Giorgios usually have forms such as Georgiou, although that is the archaic genitive, and the modern proper name has the genitive form Giorgou. The same holds for Ioannou versus Gianni (pronounced Yanni), and Dimitriou versus Dimitri.

Another distinctive feature of Greek family names, which contributes to their legendary length, is the fact that compounding is a highly productive process in this language. This can take several forms. In colloquial use, a man’s surname frequently was prefixed to his proper name in order to distinguish him from other bearers of the same name; for example, Raptomanolis ‘Emmanuel (Manolis) son of Raptis (tailor)’. This compound name could in turn give rise to a patronymic (Raptomanolakis). Alternatively, people might be distinguished by adding descriptive prefixes to their family names. The most frequent of these are the status indicators papa-, indicating a priest (priests being allowed to marry and have offspring in the Greek Orthodox Church), and hatzi-, indicating one who had made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. A third common prefix is the Turkish pejorative kara- ‘black’, hence ‘moody’ or ‘dark’. (See the entries for Papas, Hatzis, and Karas.) Thus, although a ten-syllable surname such as Papahatzidimitrakopoulos is a humorous exaggeration, it is not all that far from what actually occurs, and it is easily analysed: ‘son of Father Little Dimitris, a pilgrim (understood from the dialect form as) from the Peloponnese’.

19. Family names from Africa

Since the Second World War, and especially since 1972, immigration from Africa of people whose names are not of European origin has increased massively, especially, but not exclusively, from countries of the former British Empire. The first very large wave was the result of the expulsion of the middle class of Indian, mainly Gujarati, origin from Uganda by the dictator Idi Amin Dada. Since then immigration has proceeded at varying rates depending on political and economic circumstances, especially from Nigeria and Ghana. Immigrant Nigerians are mainly of Yoruba origin, and Ghanaians from any of several groupings of the Akan-speaking people (e.g. Fante and Twi). These are the two largest African groupings in Britain, though some southern African names also feature, formed in such languages as Chicheŵa (from Malawi) and Zulu (from South Africa), and of course Afrikaans, the South African offspring of Dutch. Prominent among the last of these are the surnames du Plessis and de Villiers, which are formally French, and are the family names of originally Huguenot families which found their way to what became Cape Colony around 1700.

It is worth bearing in mind that migration within the European Union often brings to Britain persons of African heritage whose ancestors were colonized by other European powers such as France and Portugal; accordingly, names formed in such languages as Fula and Mandinka (spoken across a large tract of West African countries) are found in Britain in increasingly large numbers, many strongly enough to feature in any future editions of this dictionary. Colonial boundaries were no respecters of indigenous ethnic or linguistic boundaries, and as a result some names common over much of West Africa and already strongly represented in Britain may appear in either French- or English-mediated spelling, for example Cissé versus Ceesay, Sissay. Such names may be categorized simply as ‘West African’ in this dictionary where no precise ethnic affiliation can be determined.

20. Family names from the West Indies

There are large and thriving West Indian communities in many cities in Britain. However, among those people of African extraction the vast majority of family names are of English origin (Brathwaite, Collymore, Nurse, Walcott) or Scottish (Campbell, McLean), being derived from the family names of colonial plantation owners and attached to slaves from their masters. The ‘washback’ of such names into the UK has markedly increased the frequency of certain names which were or had become rather uncommon in the UK (Defoe, Sobers). Occasional other immigrant family names are Portuguese (Fernandes) or French (de Caires), reminding us of wider European colonialism in the Caribbean. Recent research (‘Legacies of British Slave-ownership’, <https://www.ucl.ac.uk/lbs/>) has revealed and publicized the names of the many Britons who benefited financially from the abolition of slavery in 1833, which offers a useful way into discovering the names of earlier slave owners and the location of their plantations, and hence to discovering where slave ancestors of modern bearers of these family names lived, suffered, and died—and acquired their new, perhaps often unwelcome, surnames which they may initially have regarded as badges of ownership rather than as truly their own names. However, it is surely a hopeless task to try and do on any large, systematic scale what Alex Haley did in Roots (1976), namely recover the original (West) African names of the ancestors who were taken into slavery and transported across the Atlantic. A few such candidate family names are known, such as Cuffy, of Akan origin (Kofi), possibly adopted by the historically-minded rather than inherited; this name is found in the West Indies but not yet in any numbers in the UK (although it also exists in the UK derived from different sources).

Some West Indian family names duplicate or partly duplicate those which have arrived in the UK from the Indian subcontinent (Ali, Narine/Narayan, Ragoonath/Ragunathan), while others suggest that Indian immigration into the UK was mainly from areas which differed linguistically from those supplying immigrants to the West Indies. Guyana and Trinidad and Tobago in particular have some interesting names originating as altered forms of names deriving from Indian languages (e.g. Ramkissoon, originating as a variant of Ramakrishnan).

21. Previous and current research in family names

Compared with other fields of onomastics, such as the study of place-names, family-name research has received relatively little scholarly attention in Britain. While a number of dictionaries have been compiled (see section 1), extensive works on the general history of family names, including their development, distribution, and specific regional characteristics, are comparatively few. This is not to say, however, that the subject is new. The first known account of the history of British family names appears in Remaines of a Greater Worke, Concerning Britaine (1605) by the schoolmaster, historian, and genealogist William Camden (1551–1623). This pioneering discussion was unfortunately brief, consisting of just one out of twenty-four chapters, alongside another on given names, but Camden made some telling observations, and it provided the foundations for future study. He tells us: ‘The French and we termed them Surnames, not because they are the name of the Sire, or the father, but because they are super-added to Christian names’, and he presents a typology of surnames, with plentiful examples. Most of Camden’s remarks are in discursive prose, but pages 98–103 of his first edition (1605) contain a list of about 240 English locative family names, many of them without explanation. Others are briefly glossed, e.g.:

GILL, a small water.
GLIN, Welsh, a dale.

Camden did not attempt to compile a full-scale dictionary of family names, and even had he wished to do so, he did not have the resources necessary for such a task. Altogether, he discusses no more than 1,000 surnames, fewer than one twentieth of the total number in existence in his day. He is at his best on aristocratic family names of Norman origin, as befitted a man who later became a senior figure in English heraldry, occupying the post of Clarenceux King of Arms. Already in Tudor times the claim to be descended in the male line ‘from someone who came over with the Conqueror’ was believed (at least by the claimants) to confer social distinction, an opinion which can still be found in 2016. Camden says:

The most antient [surnames], and of best accompt, have been locally deduced from places in Normandy and the countries adjoining, being either the patronomial possessions or native places of such as served the Conquerour, or came in after out of Normandy, as Aulbeny, or Mortimer, Warren, Aubigny, Percy, Gournay, Devreux, Tankervil, Saint-Lo, Argenton, Marmion, Sint Maure, Bracy, Maigny, Nevill, Ferrers, Harrecourt, Baskerville, Mo[n]taigne, Tracy, Buefoe, Valoyns, Cayley, Lucy, Montfort, Bonville, Bovil, Auranch, &c.

(Camden 1605: 95–6).

Camden was the first of many to point out the extensive influence of folk etymology on surnames. He mentions, for example:

-vil, which is corruptly turned by some into Feld, as in Baskerfield, Somerfeld, Dangerfeld, Trublefeld, . . . and in others into Well, as Boswell for Bossevil, . . . Freshwell for Freschevil.

(Camden 1605: 95–6).

In this respect we can recall Thomas Hardy's heroine Tess Durbeyfield, who was 'of the d'Urbervilles'.

21.1 Victorian family-name dictionaries

Between Camden and the Victorians, no names dictionaries were compiled. Such work as was published was carried out by genealogists investigating the pedigrees of peers, baronets, and landed gentry in works such as Debrett (1802 et seq.) and Burke (1826 et seq.). New editions of these works have been produced more or less annually ever since. Both publishers now offer a professional ancestry research service. Part of the work of 20th-century editors of these volumes consisted in expunging the myths and flights of fancy of earlier editions, which had led Oscar Wilde to dub one of them 'the finest thing the English have ever done in fiction'.

Probably the first to provide a comprehensive history of specifically English family names was Mark Antony Lower (1849), who outlined the chronology of hereditary surname adoption and organized names in a number of categories, though these were different from those which are generally used today. However, the most important of these Victorian histories was by Charles Wareing Bardsley (1843–98), vicar of Ulverston (Lancashire), who devoted almost all of his spare time from the mid-1860s until his death to the study of English family names. In 1875 he published a study of their origins, the index to which contains over 4,000 names; it is thus virtually a concise dictionary of family names in its own right. It went through five editions before it was superseded by his dictionary, published posthumously (Bardsley 1901). This contains over 11,000 main entries coupled with more than 800 variant spellings. Bardsley appears to have been the first to categorize names using a typology broadly similar to that used in current research (including this dictionary), classifying them under one of the following five types: 'baptismal or personal names', 'local surnames', 'official surnames', 'occupative surnames', or 'sobriquet surnames or nicknames'.

Bardsley's work was the first serious attempt to provide an inventory of modern English family names, their history, and origins, using a defensible methodology. He introduced historical principles to English family-names lexicography, linking modern names, as far as he could with the knowledge of historical linguistics at his disposal, to the names mentioned in old records. He cited early evidence for each name where it was available to him, collecting names from documents such as Hundred Rolls and Poll Tax returns, as well as contemporary Post Office directories, a methodology which has become the norm and which is used in the present dictionary. His scholarship was on occasions defective, even by the standards of his own day, and for many names his conclusions have been superseded by subsequent research. He indulged in digressions that were not always relevant, and he overlooked some important connections; for example, he missed the Welsh origin of the Cecil family and therefore got the etymology of the name wrong. But he got many things right, and he adopted the honest strategy of recording common family names with a question mark in place of an explanation where the origin was unknown to him—for example, at Womack, a name for which a tentative explanation is offered for the first time in this dictionary—rather than pretending that such names do not exist. Despite its imperfections, it does not deserve the ungracious dismissal of it by Löfvenberg (1942), where it is lumped together with lesser 'more or less dilettante' works. Even now, over a century after it was published, it is still a primary source of reference, which can be consulted (with appropriate caution) in conjunction with the more recent dictionaries of Reaney (1958), Reaney and Wilson (1991), Hanks and Hodges (1988), and Hanks (2003a).

Bardsley is also sound on the possible linguistic effects of migration (1901: 3–4). Building on Camden's observations about folk etymology nearly 300 years previously, he says that one of the greatest difficulties in solving the origin of our family names comes under 'the law of imitation'. The parentage being forgotten, people naturally began to pronounce their names in a way that accorded with the local dialect of the area to which they had moved, especially if it seemed to convey a meaning. The institution of Parish Registers in 1538 by Thomas Cromwell, Henry VIII's Vicar General, required the parson of each parish to record baptisms, marriages, and burials, with the names of the individuals concerned. At first, some parsons (or their clerks) were more conscientious in doing this than others, but by 1558, the first year of the reign of Elizabeth I, most parishes conformed to the order. According to Bardsley, this led to 'the pitfall into which so many stumble. Hence in co. Somerset, Greedy for Gredhay, Rainbird for Reynebaud, Trott for Troyt, Bacchus for Bakehouse, Toogood or Doogood for Thurgod, Goodyear for Goodier, Gospell for Gosbell, Physick for Fishwick, Potiphar for Pettifer, Pitchfork (co. Linc[s].) for Pitchforth (i.e. Pickford), Roylance for Rylands, Gudgeon for Goodson (cf. the pronunciation Hodgson for Hodgson in the North), Twentyman for Twinterman, Sisterson for Sissotson (Cecilia), Rayment for Raymond, Garment for Garmond, Forty for the old "de la Fortheye" of co. Oxford (which still exists as Forty in the city), and a host of others.'

Hickford.—Local, 'of Hickford', some spot in co. Salop. Sir Robert Atkyns, in his Ancient and Present State of Gloucestershire, says (p. 109) that 'the Higfords were of an ancient family in co. Salop, originally styled Hugford.' About the reign of James I the surname was turned into Higford: this of course has now become Hickford.

The explanation, as in other entries, is supported by a brief mention of medieval evidence. Bardsley did not, of course, have the benefit of the volumes of the English Place-Name Society or of the Ordnance Survey Gazetteer, both essential tools for the modern student of English habitational family names. If he had, he would have noted that there is a place called Higford in Stockton parish, Shropshire, and that his observations on the family name are supported by early references to the place, which are mostly spelled Hug-, pointing to derivation from an Old English personal name **Hugga*. This confirmation by subsequent scholarship of Bardsley's endeavour to identify the origin of an obscure habitational family name, with the limited resources at his disposal, is by no means an isolated example.

21.2 Study of the geographical distribution of family names

A different approach to the study of family-name history was introduced by Guppy (1890). This work was the first to show that there is often an enduring statistical connection between a family name's present-day distribution and its place of origin. Such information must have been of great help to Victorian genealogists who were once uncertain of which parish or county records to consult when searching for a certain family's ancestors, while it could also aid those interested in surname history generally, particularly when searching for the previously unidentified origin of a locative name. Guppy's methodology is a model for an important strand of family-name study in an age in which computational analysis of large databases is possible. He took as a sample about 5,000 names of farmers listed in Kelly's directories, believing that farmers represented a particularly stable segment of the population, and he showed that many family names have a statistically significant association with particular counties. Thus, he found Gulliver with a frequency of 20 per 10,000 of population in Northamptonshire (but nowhere else), Guppy with 7 per 10,000 in Dorset, Hanks with 14 per 10,000 in Gloucestershire, and Pascoe with 40 per 10,000 in Cornwall. He also included some historical and genealogical data in the way that had become traditional from Camden to Bardsley, for example:

PASCOE is an old and distinguished Penzance name. Erasmus Pascoe of Trevassick, Phillack, was sheriff of the county in 1720 . . . . William Pascoe was mayor of Truro in 1758, and Thomas Pascoe was on the Commission of the Peace for the county in 1803. William Pascoe, of this county, contributed £25 to the National Defence Fund at the time of the expected invasion of the Spanish Armada in 1588.

Guppy's approach was an important precursor to the more recent geographical analysis of family-name distribution, for example using Archer's British 19th Century Surname Atlas, which has forced us in this dictionary to revise the most likely origins of some family names, as well as our understanding, foreshadowed by Bardsley's work, of how migration has affected surname distribution patterns.

21.3 Twentieth-century scholarship

Two of the better known, more recent introductions to family-name history are those by Reaney (1967) and McKinley (1990), which offer a philologist's and a historian's perspective respectively. They remain invaluable works in the field, but as a result of their intention to provide a national survey of family-name history (and not of the history of the present-day stock of family names), they do not address the often regionally specific patterns of family-name development and distribution which McKinley himself identifies:

It is impossible to examine the surnames present in several counties, from different parts of England, without being struck by the very sizable differences which existed in the Middle Ages, and which in large measure persisted into later periods, between the different English regions.

21.3.1 THE DEVELOPMENT OF ENGLISH FAMILY-NAME STUDIES IN THE 20TH CENTURY

Ernest Weekley (1865–1954) was Professor of Modern Languages at Nottingham University and the compiler of a range of practical English dictionaries for the publisher Collins. He also wrote popular books on names, including one on family names (Weekley 1916). He planned a dictionary of surnames and is sometimes spoken of as if he had compiled one, but he did not. His short but readable survey was a popular reference source in the first half of the 20th century, but was superseded by the work of Reaney (1967). The Hallward Library at the University of Nottingham contains an edition of Bardsley (1901) annotated by Weekley, along with unpublished notes by him on family-name etymologies.

Ewen (1938) is also a historical guide to English family names, rather than a dictionary. Many of the names in it are discussed reliably and informatively. Like Bardsley (1875), it contains an extensive index of the names discussed in the text. Ewen consulted a selection of medieval records (charters, court records, tax returns, and other documents) to collect evidence, though not as systematically as subsequent scholars, including Reaney and the present editors, would have wished.

21.3.2 SWEDISH SCHOLARSHIP IN THE MID-20TH CENTURY

From the 1930s to the 1950s, several doctoral theses on Old and Middle English surnames were published in Sweden, characterized by rigorous systematicity in the examination of medieval data. Two of the most important of these are Fransson (1935) and Löfvenberg (1942). Both authors were students of the most prominent Swedish scholar of Old and Middle English onomastics, Eilert Ekwall, who himself wrote studies of surnames and personal names in medieval London (1945, 1947). The scholarship of Fransson and Löfvenberg is impeccable, but their scope is limited by the constraints of their dissertation word-limit: their books each have entries for only just over 700 medieval surnames, and not all the names they studied have survived into the modern period. Fransson made some attempt to link the surnames that he found in medieval records to modern lexical items where possible and in some entries commented on the geographical distribution of the surname, but Löfvenberg did not. Both saw their task as excerpting and organizing the medieval material, and therefore as accounting for medieval surnames rather than explaining modern family names. Fransson's book contains an alphabetical index of names and the microstructure of each entry is dictionary-like. However, the macrostructure is not that of a dictionary. The entries are arranged not in alphabetical order but in chapters dealing with particular sets of occupations, such as: 1. Dealers and traders; 7. Masonry and roofing workers; 9. Physicians and barbers. Fransson collected evidence from only ten English counties and ignored occupational surnames that did not fall into his nine categories, so, for example, there are no entries for terms of office such as Reeve and Sheriff (see Sherriff). Thuresson (1950) supplemented Fransson's work with a study of a further 850 occupational terms. Neither Fransson nor Thuresson approach the vexed question of so-called metonymic occupational names (e.g. Cloke for a cloak seller); see section 3.3.5. Löfvenberg (1942) was also of restricted scope, dealing with 'only local surnames consisting of an English or a French preposition followed by a noun (or place-name) preceded by the definite article [in Middle English documents]'. Like Fransson, he makes some attempt to connect the medieval evidence forward to modern family names, realizing the scope for improvement over previous work. He comments:

The value of an investigation of Middle English local surnames is manifold. Apart from giving a great deal of information about the life, conditions and customs of people in the Middle Ages, local surnames—like other surnames—are of great value for linguistic study. . . . In this thesis there are Middle English forms for such modern English surnames as Apps, Arlett, Barnett, Bay, Beer(e), Bear(e), Burchett, Bye, Denn(e), Fanne, Forty, Foss(e), Frith, Hale, Ham, Hazlitt, Heal(e) . . . [all of them misinterpreted by Bardsley in his dictionary].

Other important works on surnames by Swedish scholars are Sundby (1963) and Jönsjö (1979). Much like the work of the Swedish scholars already mentioned, Sundby's study is rooted in the medieval period and does little to show the reader how Middle English dialects have contributed to the modern forms of family names. He used the surnames of people recorded in a number of documents to investigate the Middle English dialect of Worcestershire, and in doing so he exemplified the value of surnames as evidence for linguistic variation in Middle English. By dividing his documentary materials into periods of fifty years, he was also able to show how the language changed over time. Jönsjö's study is another useful collection of medieval evidence, with etymological explanations of surnames derived from nicknames. The names are arranged in alphabetical order, but only their medieval forms are used, and so it can be difficult to connect these medieval names with their modern equivalents. Despite their restricted scope, all of these works are of importance to the field of family-name study and show how the systematic analysis of surname data can offer insights about the language more broadly.

21.3.3 P. H. REANEY

During and after the Second World War, a respected English place-name scholar introduced new standards of documentary and philological rigour to family-name studies by forging more defensible links between the early evidence and family names attested in modern times. While fire-watching in London during the Blitz, P. H. Reaney (1890–1968), schoolmaster and author of the English Place-Name Society (EPNS) volumes The Place-Names of Essex (1935) and The Place-Names of Cambridgeshire (1943), systematically collected evidence for surnames from printed versions of medieval records and arranged them under what he assumed were their modern forms. This work contributed to his Dictionary of British Surnames, first published in 1958 (third edition, Reaney and Wilson 1991).

On his death, Reaney left his papers to the University of Sheffield. In 1976 and again in 1991 R. M. Wilson, Professor of English at Sheffield, published revised editions of Reaney's dictionary, including some 4,700 additional entries, mostly for family names derived from place-names which Reaney had been forced to omit from his original edition for reasons of space. In total, the third edition of the dictionary contains over 16,000 entries. Its focus is on citations of names from Subsidy Rolls, Pipe Rolls, Feet of Fines, Assize Rolls, and other national and local manuscript sources (including published editions). References to these are given in an extremely abbreviated form. Explanations are sometimes terse to the point of being incomprehensible, and the connections between medieval forms and modern family names are quite speculative. The entry for Hanke, Hanks shows both the strengths and the weaknesses of Reaney's approach:

Hanke, Hanks: Anke Hy 2 DC (L); Hanke 12th ib.; Anke de Ankinton' 1194 P (L); Hank' carpentarius 1280 Osenev (O); Roger Hanke 1275 RH (NF); Ralph Hancks 1642 PrGR. Hank is usually regarded as a Flemish pet-form of John. The early examples above are undoubtedly of Scandinavian origin, from ON Anki, a diminutive of some name in Arn-.

Like most entries in Reaney's great dictionary, this contains a selection of medieval and other early evidence—an astonishing achievement in the days before computers. However, it cannot be read without constant reference to the list of abbreviations in the front matter. Moreover, Hanke and Hanks are almost certainly unrelated names, formed in different parts of the country from different etymons, so the final sentence, though true, merely underlines the irrelevance of Anke and Hanke to the modern family name Hanks. Thirdly, as Guppy had already shown half a century earlier, Hanks is and always has been associated with Gloucestershire and the adjacent county of Wiltshire, a region where there was no Scandinavian settlement. The mention of Hank' carpentarius in Osenev (near Oxford) in 1280 is in the right general area at the right time: it could perhaps be relevant to the family name Hanks. The most likely etymology of this is not Scandinavian but from Han, a pet form of Jehan (John)—possibly brought to the south Midlands by Flemish weavers. The family name is formed according to a pattern found also in Danks, Hinks, Wilks, Jenks, and other south Midlands surnames. Ralph Hancks, in Preston (Lancashire) in 1642, is most plausibly explained as a migrant (or descendant of a migrant) from Gloucestershire, even though no biographical details have yet been found to confirm or disconfirm this supposition.

21.3.4 COTTLE AND TITFORD

The first edition (1967) of Basil Cottle's Penguin Dictionary of Surnames contains 8,000 entries, expanded in the second edition (1978) to 12,000. The coverage is, however, somewhat idiosyncratic:

many common names are missing. The entries are as academically reliable as could reasonably be expected given the resources available at the time, though many can now be shown to be wrong. They are brief and clear to the expert, but dense to the point of obscurity to the general user. With few exceptions, the explanations are preceded by one of four letters indicating the typology of the provenance: F (= first name), L (= local name), (O = occupational name), or N (= nickname). Etymons are generally implied, rather than stated; for example, Isgar is explained as ‘F “iron spear” OE’. The alert reader can easily discover that it is a relationship name deriving from a given name (F, ‘first name’), and that it is of Old English origin (OE), but the Old English words for ‘iron’ and ‘spear’ are not stated, and an unwary reader might conclude that the family name is of Old English origin, which it is not; it is the given name on which it is based that is of Old English origin, and that consists of the words for ‘iron’ and ‘spear’ with no necessary implication that the amalgamated concept ‘iron spear’ is intended. Explanations are not supported by citations from medieval documents, but the dictionary was a paperback for popular consumption, already running to over 440 pages in the second edition, so Cottle’s decision can be seen as defensible. On the positive side, geographical distribution is often noted, with occasional references to Guppy’s work.

John Titford’s Penguin Dictionary of British Surnames (2009), which is a revision of Cottle’s work, makes good use of modern distributional information to correct a number of errors, especially in the explanation of family names from place-names. He also draws on some of Redmonds’ discoveries (about Ovenden and the rarer name Woffindale, for example) and on family-history research by members of the Guild of One-Name Studies. As a family historian himself, Titford contributes a perceptive introductory essay to his dictionary on the nature of modern family-name development and its research implications. He omits family names that do not have significant frequency in modern times (about 2,000 are lost as compared with Cottle’s second edition), and the dictionary deals with only around 10,000 names, fewer than half of those in Reaney and Wilson and fewer than a quarter of those in the present volume. Some of his explanations repeat erroneous or inadequate explanations from Cottle and from Reaney and Wilson, including several, such as Maud, Moxon, and Stringfellow, that had already been corrected in Redmonds (1997). Like all previous family-name lexicographers, if Titford cannot explain the origin of a name, he simply omits it. This contrasts with the present work, where names whose origin cannot be explained, despite the best efforts of the whole team, are recorded with statements about their frequency and distribution and (usually) a selection of such evidence as there is and (sometimes) a summary of plausible hypotheses.

21.3.5 THE ENGLISH SURNAMES SERIES AND OTHER COUNTY AND REGIONAL FAMILY-NAME SURVEYS

The English Surnames Series (ESS), the fruit of a project begun in 1965 at the University of Leicester under McKinley’s editorship, set out to investigate the history of family names at the county level, in order to improve our understanding of regionally specific patterns such as name-type distribution and hereditary family-name development. Unfortunately, only seven volumes were published (Redmonds 1973, McKinley 1975, 1977, 1981, 1988, Postles 1995, 1998), but the regional characteristics that were identified did much to show the value of localized name study and its contribution to local history research. Cecily Clark recognized the importance of this approach, noting that the works of the ESS

... never lose sight of the special nature of naming, as distinct from common vocabulary, and so proceed consistently in terms of social status, of domicile and landholding, of migration-patterns, of economic activity, or gender and familial relationships, of types of milieu, and of ramification of individual clans (Clark 1995: 384).

However, it is not necessarily the case that this county-based research is suitable for investigating regional family-name patterns. Postles (1995: 4), in his ESS volume for Devon, concedes that counties can never be regional societies, while Redmonds (2004: xiv), from his Yorkshire vantage point, comments that ‘many of the counties are made up of several distinct regions, and these can be linked to marked differences in their topography, history and language.’ Future family-name research could, then, benefit from focusing on socially, topographically, culturally, and linguistically distinct regions, perhaps investigating particularly localized patterns of development, much as Hey (2000: xi) has suggested:

The research that will forward our understanding of how surnames arose and spread will need to be focused on particular parts of the country, looking at how groups of names were formed at different times in particular local communities.

An example of such a beginning is Harry Parkin’s University of the West of England dissertation on Cotswold surnames (Parkin 2014).

21.3.6 HANKS AND HODGES

Hanks and Hodges (1988) is both an explanatory inventory of modern British and Irish surnames and a comparative survey of European family names. It contains explanations for several hundred English, Scottish, Irish, Welsh, and Cornish family names not mentioned by Reaney and Wilson, together with a very large number of European cognates. Altogether, this dictionary explains nearly 70,000 family names, nested etymologically under 7,000 main entries. It met with a mixed reception in Britain, but was warmly welcomed in America, where most family names are of non-English origin. Scholars in the British Isles complained about the absence of medieval evidence supporting the explanations. Making good this deficiency was part of the motivation for undertaking the research on which FaNBI is based.

Encouraged by the favourable reception of this work in America, Hanks went on to compile a much larger Dictionary of American Family Names (Hanks 2003a), an even more ambitious but much better focused work, in three volumes, whose entry list is based on computational analysis of the names of over 88 million American telephone subscribers. There is an entry for every name borne by more than 100 telephone subscribers, as well as for many rarer names, such as Stuyvesant, insofar as the latter are of historical or etymological importance. There are over 70,000 entries altogether. The explanations are the work not of Hanks alone but of thirty of the world's leading surname experts. The 'nesting' arrangement of Hanks and Hodges was abandoned. Instead, every family name (even spelling variants) receives an entry in its own right. There are genealogical notes on early American bearers for many entries, especially in cases where the form of a European name was substantially changed in 17th- and 18th-century America, a process discussed in Hanks (2003b). A sample entry is:

Billington (1345) English: habitational name from any of three places called Billington, in Lancashire, Staffordshire, and Bedfordshire. The first of these is first recorded in 1196 as Billinduna 'sword-shaped hill'; the second is in Domesday Book as Belintone 'settlement (Old English tūn) of Billa', the one in Bedfordshire is recorded in 1196 as Billendon, from an Old English personal name Billa + dūn 'hill'. The place in Lancashire is the most likely source of the surname.

FOREBEARS John Billington (1580–1630), from Spalding, Lincolnshire, was a passenger on the Mayflower in 1620 and an early settler in Plymouth Colony. Governor Bradford called him 'the profanest' of the settlers; eventually he was hanged for murder. His son Francis married and had children.

22. Multidisciplinary research

While the county-level approach of the ESS may not be entirely appropriate for localized family-name research, that is not to say that its findings are without value. The ESS's consideration of many historical factors, such as cultural, linguistic, and social history, emphasized and encouraged a multidisciplinary approach to family-name study, rather than the predominantly linguistic focus of past works, such as Reaney's (1967). More recent research has tended to adopt multidisciplinary techniques, investigating the etymology and forms of names alongside distributional, genetic, biographical, prosopographical, and other complementary historical factors, in order to achieve a greater level of understanding about their origins and development. The potential role of DNA evidence in onomastic research has been discussed above. Redmonds, King, and Hey (2011) have clearly shown the benefits of such a multidisciplinary approach, particularly in an analysis of prosopographical and distribution evidence, where they consider a wide range of historical sources to determine the origin of the previously enigmatic family name Tordoff. The 1881 distribution shows this family name was concentrated in the West Riding of Yorkshire, encouraging the researcher to search local records from around this area of England to find the origin of the name. However, the Dumfriesshire origin of the name led Redmonds, King, and Hey (2011: 99) to the conclusion that the family name Tordoff 'derives from a locality known as Tordoff Point on the Scottish side of the Solway Firth.' Without the prosopographical evidence, this origin may not have been so easily found or so confidently asserted.

Redmonds (1997) has also shown the advantages of considering a wide range of historical sources in determining a family name's etymology, particularly in his analysis of alias names. With a purely philological approach, a family name's origin can be identified through the comparison of similar name-forms. However, where a name has been altered by scribal influence to such an extent that its form is no longer etymologically transparent, linguistic comparison is of little help, and a different approach is required. Redmonds' investigation of a large number of sources allowed him to discover and analyse cases where a person is recorded with two or more names connected by the Latin word alias, literally 'otherwise', which in some cases suggest an etymological connection between two family names which might not appear to be related judging by their form alone. One such example is the case of Simon Woodhouse alias Wydis from Thornton le Moor in 1611 (Redmonds 1997: 125; see the examples and discussion in the entries for Woodhouse and Woodiwiss in this dictionary).

The multidisciplinary approach has not just involved the application of wider historical knowledge and DNA evidence to family-name study but the use of family-name data in other historical studies. McClure (1979) used toponymic surname data to investigate rural and urban patterns of medieval migration, and the value of this methodology led to its use in further migration studies (see Penn 1983, Rosser 1989, Kowaleski 1995). Researchers in the fields of demography, population, and geographical information science have made use of family-name evidence (Schürer 2002, 2004, Longley and others 2005), while lexicographical research using family-name evidence has also been carried out (see, for example, Mawer 1930, McClure 2010a, 2010b, and the Swedish works, mainly by scholars at Lund University, such as Fransson (1935), Löfvenberg (1942), Thuresson (1950), and Jönsjö (1979), mentioned above, which provided antedatings, accepted into the Oxford English Dictionary, for a large number of words of English vocabulary).

Outside the ESS series, and published since its suspension, an excellent county (or rather sub-county) survey of family names is the three-volume work on names characteristic of North Staffordshire by Edgar Tooth (2000, 2002, 2004, 2010). Finally, a major new county dictionary is Redmonds (2015). This massive work provides a model for an approach that, if replicated in every district of Britain, would greatly advance our knowledge of family names and their history and contribute significantly to a reliable and comprehensive dictionary. The editors of FaNBI acknowledge with gratitude the fact that George Redmonds made a draft of his work available to the project before it was published, and many of the Yorkshire entries have been substantially improved as a result.

Glossary

ablative A grammatical term for the case form of nouns and adjectives in inflected languages, the main function of which is to indicate movement away from an object.

accusative A grammatical term for the case form of nouns and adjectives in inflected languages, the main function of which is to identify the direct object of a verb.

affricate A speech sound such as /pf/ or /tʃ/ (the latter being usually spelled -ch- or -tch in English), consisting of a plosive immediately followed by a fricative at the same position of articulation.

Afro-Asiatic Denoting or belonging to a family of languages spoken in North Africa, the Middle East, and the Horn of Africa, including Semitic languages (notably Arabic and Hebrew), Berber, Hausa, and Somali.

agent derivative A noun denoting a person or thing that performs an action related to a verb or other word from which it derives, for example baker for someone who bakes.

Akan The principal language of the Akan people of Ghana, dialects of which are Akuapim and Asante (together known as Twi), and Fante.

altered form A family name whose form has changed in a linguistically irregular fashion, often by folk etymology, such as Ambridge from Ambrose.

alveolar A speech sound such as English /t/ or /d/, made by pressing part of the tongue against the alveolar ridge (the firm ridge immediately behind the upper teeth).

Amharic The language of Ethiopia, a Semitic language related to Arabic and Hebrew. It has its own distinctive writing system.

anglicize To alter the form of a word or name so that it conforms more naturally to the rules of English spelling or pronunciation, such as Bloom for German and Jewish Blum (from German Blume, Yiddish blum ‘flower’), or Delaney for Irish Ó Dubhshláine.

Anglo-Latin The Medieval Latin language as used in England, which contained many latinizations of English words, for example murderatio ‘murder’.

Anglo-Norman (also called Anglo-Norman French) A variety of Norman French spoken and written in medieval England following the Norman Conquest in 1066. The people who settled in England after the Conquest and who spoke this language included not only Normans but also their followers from Brittany, Flanders, and Picardy. Between the 11th and the 14th century in England, it was the language of the aristocracy, the administration, and the law courts. Many family names in England are of Anglo-Norman origin.

Anglo-Scandinavian A variety of the Scandinavian language (Old Norse) spoken in northern and eastern parts of England following Scandinavian settlement in and around the 9th and 10th centuries. It gave rise to some new English place-names (see the family name Ireton) and to some new Old Scandinavian personal names (see Annand), as well as to some hybrid personal names combining Scandinavian and English elements (see Ketteridge), and to anglicized forms of original Scandinavian personal names (see Thurstan).

antonym A word that has the opposite meaning to the one under consideration. For example, the family name Smallbone evidently originated as a nickname that was an antonym of Longbone.

aphetic Denoting or pertaining to the loss of an unstressed vowel at the beginning of a word or name, for example Prentice from apprentice.

apotropaic name A name given in the belief that it would ward off evil spirits or avert bad luck. The Ashkenazic Jewish male given name Altman, literally ‘old man’, is believed to have been bestowed on children as an apotropaic name, intended to ward off the Angel of Death and ensure that the bearer would live to be an old man.

Arabic A Semitic language spoken in the Arabian Peninsula, North Africa, Iraq, and elsewhere, with many different dialects. Classical written Arabic is the language of the Muslim holy scripture, the Qur’an, and of the Hadith.

Aramaic A Semitic language closely related to Hebrew and Arabic. It was the language spoken by Jesus of Nazareth and is the language of the Jewish collection of rabbinic writings called the Talmud.

Ashkenazic Denoting the Jews of central and eastern Europe, who spoke Yiddish, a specifically Jewish language derived from German.

aspiration An audible exhalation of breath, as occurs in English in the pronunciation of initial accented /p/, /t/, and /k/.

assimilation A process resulting from the influence of one speech sound, word, or name on another, resulting in both sounds, words, or names becoming similar or identical. For example, Middle English Pernel (now Parnell) has become Pennell (through assimilation of /rn/ to /nn/, and Scottish Pollock has been altered in Ireland to Pogue through assimilation to the Irish word póg ‘kiss’.

- augmentative With reference in particular to Italian names, denoting alteration of a basic name form through the addition of a suffix implying large size, for example Nardone as a variant of the personal name Nardo.
- Austronesian A major group of languages in South East Asia and the Pacific islands, including the Malayo-Polynesian languages (Cambodian, Indonesian, Malay, and Vietnamese), and Taiwanese.
- bachelor In the feudal system, a young knight who was too young or too poor to have his own following of vassals.
- back-formation The creation of a word from an existing word by removing part of it on the false assumption that it is a derivative of the new formation; for example, creation of the verb edit from the Latin noun editor, which literally means ‘one who gives something out’, from e(x) ‘out’ + datum ‘given’. One source of the family name Hew is the Middle English word hewe ‘domestic, servant’, which is a back-formation from the Middle English plural form hewen ‘members of a household, domestics’.
- Bantu A large sub-group of the Niger-Congo language family, spoken in central and southern Africa, including Ndebele, Shona, and Zulu.
- Basque A language and people of the Spanish and French Pyrenees. The Basque language has no known relationship to any other language.
- Bengali An Indo-Aryan language spoken by the people of Bangladesh and the Indian states of West Bengal, Assam, and Tripura.
- Berber An Afro-Asiatic language spoken in North Africa.
- bilabial A consonantal speech sound such as /b/ or /p/, involving closure of the lips to block the flow of air.
- binomial system The system of names identifying individual people that is now used in most parts of the world, including Britain and Ireland. Each name in the binomial system consists of two parts: one or more forenames, given to an individual at or soon after birth, and a surname or family name, which in most traditions is normally inherited from the individual’s father.
- bowdlerize To remove morphemes, words, phrases, or paragraphs from (a name, word, or text) on the grounds that they are considered obscene, in family names typically having the result that the historical formation of the name was obscured. In the Victorian era, many names ending in -cock were altered to -cott under the influence of bowdlerization.
- Breton A Celtic language closely related to Cornish, which was taken to Brittany by migrants from south-west Britain in the 5th century; also the term for a native of Brittany.
- British With reference to a historical language, an earlier stage of the Brittonic language, contemporary with the use of Latin in Roman Britain.
- Brittonic (also Brythonic) The Celtic language (or group of languages) spoken by the ancient Britons in pre-Roman and Roman times, of which modern Welsh is the main present-day descendant.
- broad consonant In Gaelic languages, a consonant that is velar or has become velarized.
- Bulgarian The southern Slavic language spoken in Bulgaria.
- byname Originally an alternative or subsidiary name; now usually a non-hereditary surname; also another name (such as a nickname) in transferred use as a personal name.
- Cambodian An Austronesian language (also known as Khmer) spoken in Cambodia.
- Cantonese A dialect of the Chinese language spoken in Hong Kong and southern China. The majority of British family names of Chinese origin are from the Cantonese dialect.
- Castilian See Spanish.
- Catalan The Romance language spoken in Catalonia and Andorra, where it has official status. It is closely related to Occitan, the vernacular language of southern France, as well as to Spanish.
- Celtic A group of languages of major historical importance, constituting a branch of the Indo-European language family. There are two main groups of Celtic languages in the British Isles: Goidelic (also known as Q-Celtic), which consists of Irish, Scottish Gaelic, and Manx; and Brittonic (also known as P-Celtic), which consists of Welsh, Cornish, and Cumbric. With the exception of Welsh, Celtic languages are now rare or endangered, although Irish is a compulsory subject in schools in Ireland and valiant attempts are also being made to preserve Scottish Gaelic and revive Manx and Cornish. Irish in particular, among Celtic languages, has yielded a large number of family names. See also Breton.
- Central French A variety of Old French that was current in central France and southern Normandy in medieval times, and from which the standard modern French language is derived.
- Chinese: The language of China, the largest member of the Sino-Tibetan language family. Standard Chinese is the Mandarin dialect of northern China, but the majority of family names of Chinese origin in Britain come from the Cantonese dialect spoken in Hong Kong. Other important dialects include Hokkien (spoken in Fujian province) and Teochew (spoken in eastern Guangdong province), both of which have spread widely throughout East Asia due to emigration. Chinese is written in an ideographic writing system, in which symbols represent concepts rather than sounds.
- clan A group of people, smaller than a nation, usually consisting of people who claim descent from a common ancestor.
- cognates Two or more words or names that derive from the same source due to regular processes of historical change in different but related languages. For example, the Continental Germanic personal name Baldric, which lies behind the English family name Baldry, is a cognate of the Old English name **Bealdric*, which is the origin of the English family name Baldrige.
- Continental Germanic A branch of the West Germanic language that was spoken on the continent of Europe in the first millennium AD. Old English constituted a different branch. A - typical Continental Germanic personal name was Rodbert, which was adopted by speakers of Norman French and brought to England as Robert. Dialects of Continental Germanic are High German, Low German, and Dutch.

- Cornish A Celtic language that was spoken in Cornwall until the 18th century and is now being revived by enthusiasts.
- Croatian A southern Slavic language spoken in Croatia and Herzegovina. It is mutually comprehensible with Serbian, but (unlike Serbian) is written in the Roman alphabet.
- Cumbric An early medieval Brittonic language that was spoken in parts of northern England and southern Scotland up to the 14th century.
- Czech A Western Slavic language spoken in the Czech Republic. It is closely related to Slovak and more distantly related to Polish.
- dative A grammatical term for the case form of nouns and adjectives in inflected languages, the main functions of which are, often following a preposition, to identify location and to express the indirect object of a verb.
- day-name A personal name based on the word for one of the days of the week, typically found in the Akan language of Ghana, for example Cudjoe ‘Monday’.
- de-aspiration Loss of breathiness in the articulation of an aspirated consonant (see aspiration); in FaNBI it is used also to refer to the loss of initial /h/, as in Enderson for Henderson.
- denasalization Pronunciation of a word or name without the nasal quality normally found in the source name or word. See nasal.
- dental A speech sound made when the tongue is in contact with the teeth, for example English th, which represents both /θ/ (unvoiced) and /ð/ (voiced).
- depalatalization The process of a sound ceasing to be palatal by the movement of the tongue away from the hard palate, as when initial /ʃ/ in Sharples is depalatalized to /s/ in Surplice.
- Devanagari The traditional syllabic script used for writing Sanskrit, Hindi, and other languages of northern India.
- devoicing A process whereby a speech sound that is normally voiced becomes voiceless or less voiced, as in Clendenning for Glendinning.
- dialect A version of a language that is peculiar to a particular geographical area or social group.
- diminutive suffix A suffix that generally means ‘little’, with respect to size or importance. It is commonly added to personal names, to create a hypocoristic or pet form, as in the case of the English family name Willett, a pet form of Will.
- diphthong A speech sound formed by the combination of two vowel sounds within a single syllable, as in the words cow and time.
- dissimilation A process involving the influence of one speech sound on another, resulting in the sounds becoming different, as in Dunbavin for Dunbabin, or in the elimination of one of a pair of identical sounds, as in Gilliand for Gilliland.
- disyllabic Consisting of two syllables.
- dithematic Consisting of two etymological elements. For example, Old English Ælfrēd (Alfred) is a dithematic personal name composed of the elements ælf ‘elf’ + rēd ‘counsel’. Wilhelm (William) is a Continental Germanic dithematic personal name composed of the elements will ‘will’ + helm ‘helmet or protection’.
- Dravidian A family of languages of southern India. Major Dravidian languages are Malayalam, Tamil, Telugu, and Kannada.
- Druze An Arabic-speaking people of the Near East (especially Syria and Lebanon), who have their own distinctive and ancient religion, which is based partly on the Hebrew Bible and partly on ancient Greek philosophy, with an admixture of some unique beliefs and holy books.
- Dutch A West Germanic language spoken in the Netherlands and Flanders. It is related to English and German.
- early bearer In this dictionary, any of the individuals whose names are found in old records, who may be mentioned in an entry as evidence of the origin, development, or geographical distribution of a family name.
- Early Modern English The English language from the late 15th century to about 1700.
- epicentre The geographical point of origin of a family name, from which it gradually spreads outwards in many different directions.
- established name A family name that is present in Britain at the present day and was also comparatively frequent here up to and including the 19th century. Compare recent immigrant name.
- ethnic name A family name that denotes a person’s race or country of origin, for example French, Walsh.
- etymology The origin and historical development of a word or name; also the study of word or name origins.
- etymon A word, phrase, or morpheme from which a later word or a name is derived. In this dictionary, etymons are italicized.
- excrement Denoting a non-etymological sound or letter that has been added arbitrarily to the end of a name, for example the excrement -d in Hammond, from the Old French personal name Hamon, and the excrement -s that was commonly added to established family names after the medieval period, as in names like Rooms and Castles. Compare inorganic, intrusive, prosthetic.
- explanation As part of an entry in this dictionary, an account of the etymology and origin of a family name. There can be one or more explanations within a sense. Where a sense has more than one explanation, each explanation is numbered using Roman numerals.
- family name A hereditary name, normally inherited by an individual from his or her father; also, in certain traditional British and Irish families, adopted by a woman from her husband on marriage.

- Faroese The language of the Faroe Islands, a form of Old Scandinavian.
- feudal system A hierarchical social structure, introduced to England by the Normans, in which land was held in exchange for service or labour, from the king down to the lowest peasant.
- Filipino See Tagalog.
- Flemish Denoting a person (a Fleming), a place, or a linguistic item that is characteristic of Flanders, a historical Dutch-speaking region in what is now divided among northern Belgium, the north-west corner of France, and the extreme south-western Netherlands.
- folk etymology Alteration of the form of a word or name to make it conform to a word or words already in the language but which are not related to the name in question, such as Surplice and Surplus as variants of Sharples.
- forename See given name.
- franklin In medieval Britain, a free landowner who was not of noble birth.
- freeman In medieval Britain, a man who was not a slave or a serf, nor a member of the gentry, and was not in the service of a lord.
- French The official language of France, also one of the official languages of Belgium and Switzerland, and certain other countries that were formerly colonies of France. A member of the Romance group of Indo-European languages, French is also known as langue d'oïl in contradistinction to langue d'oc, the language native to southern France (see Occitan and compare Old French).
- Frenchified Denoting or pertaining to a word or name whose form has been altered so that it appears to be French. For example, Cantillon is a Frenchified form of the Irish family name Ó Caindealbháin, the usual anglicized form of which is Quinlan.
- fricative A speech sound such as /f/ or /v/, made by forcing air through a narrow opening between vocal organs.
- Frisian A West Germanic language spoken in the northern Netherlands and adjacent parts of Germany. It is closely related to Old English.
- fronting A process in the development of a language whereby a speech sound is articulated with the tongue further forward in the mouth.
- Fula (also known as Fulani) A language of the Niger-Congo language family spoken in west and central Africa.
- further information In this dictionary, information in an entry that is not an integral part of the explanation of its etymological origin.
- fused preposition In family names, a preposition that is joined to the name that it precedes. For example, de + Anvers 'from Anvers' was fused and became Danvers.
- Gaelic Either of the two closely related Celtic languages spoken in Ireland and western Scotland. For the Gaelic language of Ireland, the term Irish is now normally used, as distinct from Scottish Gaelic.
- gaelicize To change the form of a word or name so that it conforms to the usual forms of Irish or Scottish Gaelic. Many Irish names reverted to their historical Gaelic forms during the 20th century. Both then and during the Middle Ages some non-Gaelic names were gaelicized, for example the Norman family name Wolf or Woulfe was gaelicized as de Bhulbh.
- Galician The vernacular language of north-west Spain, closely related to both Spanish and Portuguese.
- genealogy A line of descent traced from an ancestor; the study of lines of descent.
- generic When referring to a place-name element, a non-specific or classifying word used in a name that is composed of two or more etymological elements. The generic is usually the final element in English place-names, for example -ton 'village, estate'.
- genitive A grammatical term for the case form of nouns and adjectives in inflected languages, the main function of which is to indicate possession or association.
- Germanic An ancient Indo-European language spoken in Roman times in north and central Europe; also used as a collective term for the family of languages derived from this, including German, Dutch, Frisian, English, and the Scandinavian languages. Historically, ancient Germanic bears much the same relationship to the modern languages as Latin does to modern Italian, Spanish, French, etc. However, very few records of ancient Germanic survive, so scholars from the 19th century onwards have devoted much attention and ingenuity to reconstructing its vocabulary and grammar, based on the principle that language change is normally regular.
- Ghanaian Denoting or pertaining to the country of Ghana in West Africa; also used as a general term for the Afro-Asiatic languages spoken in Ghana, especially Akan and Twi.
- ghetto A part of a town or city inhabited by a minority ethnic group, originally applied to the Jewish quarter of many central European cities.
- given name In the binomial naming system that is now standard in Britain and the rest of Europe, a name given to a person at or soon after birth, in contrast to the family name or surname, which (traditionally) is usually inherited from the father.
- glide A sound inserted to ease a phonetically difficult transition from one to another, for example the -d- in Hendry from Henry. Glides are sometimes referred to as intrusive.
- gloss A translation or explanation of a word. In this dictionary, glosses are printed within single quotation marks.
- Goidelic The group of Celtic languages that consists of Irish, Scottish Gaelic, and Manx. Compare Brittonic.
- grange In medieval Britain, an outlying farm or group of buildings, usually belonging to a religious establishment or feudal lord, where agricultural produce was stored.
- Great Vowel Shift A change in pronunciation of the long vowels of the English language, which took place, for the most part, between the 15th and 17th centuries, i.e. the late Middle and Early Modern English periods. The vowels were raised (see raising) or

- became diphthongs. Thus the word name, pronounced /na:mə/ in late Middle English, has become /neim/ in Modern English. Similarly seaman /sɛ:mən/ became /seimən/ and then /si:mən/; field /fe:ld/ has become /fi:ld/; Simon /si:mən/ has become /saimən/; road /rɔ:d/ has become /rəud/; goose /go:s/ has become /gu:s/; and house /hu:s/ has become /haus/.
- Greek A branch of the Indo-European family of languages, formerly spoken widely in the countries around the Mediterranean, and especially in the places that are now Greece, Cyprus, southern Italy, Albania, parts of Asia Minor, and the southern Balkans. Greek is the language of the New Testament, from which many Christian given names have been taken and adapted to vernacular forms in other languages, including English.
- Gujarati An Indo-Aryan language closely related to Hindi, spoken in the Indian state of Gujarat.
- Hadith In Islam, a collection of reported sayings uttered by the Prophet Muhammad.
- handout name A type of surname given to European Jews. Handout names were chosen by an administrative functionary and bestowed on a person who did not have a surname but was required to have one by law. Jewish names such as Berlin, Engel, Feinberg, and Goldfuss (anglicized as Goldfoot) are likely examples. A handout name may be identical to an ornamental name.
- Hausa An Afro-Asiatic language of the Hausa people, spoken in northern Nigeria and southern Niger.
- Hebrew An ancient Semitic language (closely related to Aramaic); the liturgical language of the Jewish people. As a spoken language it had already declined in use among the Jews by the time of the Roman Empire, but was revived in the 19th century. It is the principal etymological language of Old Testament personal names.
- High German The standard literary language of Germany and Austria, also spoken in Switzerland and elsewhere. Compare Low German.
- Hindi An Indo-Aryan language spoken throughout northern India, derived from Sanskrit; it is an official language of India and is normally written in Devanagari script. Hindi and Urdu are mutually comprehensible.
- Hispanic The group of languages including Castilian Spanish, Catalan, and Galician, which are spoken in Spain, much of South and Central America, the Philippines, and many other parts of the world. The term generally excludes Portuguese, for geopolitical reasons (because Portuguese is the national language of Portugal and Brazil), but is sometimes used to include Basque, even though the Basque language is not related to Spanish. By the same token, local languages in Spanish-speaking regions, such as Tagalog (a language of the Philippines), are sometimes included within the scope of the term Hispanic.
- Hokkien A dialect or group of dialects of Chinese spoken in south-east China, especially in Fujian province, from where it spread widely throughout South East Asia, especially to Malaysia and Singapore. See also Teochew.
- homonyms Two or more words or names that share the same form but which have a different etymology, such as the family name Penn, which may be from British **penn* ‘head’ or Old English penn ‘enclosure, fold’, or from the Middle English female personal name Penne, probably a pet form of Pernel (Latin Petronilla).
- homophones Two or more words or names that are pronounced identically but have different meanings and may also have different spellings, such as Cawley and Corley.
- house name A type of locative name that refers to a distinctive sign attached to a house or inn before the days of house numbers and general literacy. House names such as Rothschild ‘red shield’ were characteristic of cities in central Europe such as Frankfurt am Main during the period of surname formation.
- Huguenot A French Protestant of the 16th and 17th centuries. The Huguenots were persecuted by the Catholic authorities in France and many thousands of them fled as refugees to England, the Netherlands, Scandinavia, and the Protestant principalities and states in Germany.
- hundred A historical English administrative unit, a subdivision of a county.
- Hungarian The language of Hungary; one of the Uralic languages, which include Finnish and Estonian.
- hypercorrection A change in the form of a word or name in conformity with some supposed norm, as for example when a northern English speaker pronounces put to rhyme with the southern pronunciation of cut, in the false belief that this is somehow more ‘correct’ than the usual pronunciation rhyming with foot.
- hypocoristic Denoting an affectionate pet form of a name.
- Igbo The language of the Igbo people of south-eastern Nigeria; a member of the Niger-Congo language family.
- immigrant name See recent immigrant name.
- Indo-Aryan A language family of the Indian subcontinent and Iran, a major branch of the Indo-European family, comprising in particular Sanskrit and Hindi, Urdu, Bengali, and other languages of northern India, as well as Persian (Farsi) and Sinhalese.
- Indo-European A family of languages comprising almost all the languages of Europe (including English) and northern India, as well as certain other places. Exceptions (non-Indo-European languages) in Europe are Hungarian, Finnish, Estonian, Basque, and Turkish.
- Indonesian The official language of Indonesia, closely related to Malay.
- inflection Modification of the form of a word, typically the ending, to express a grammatical function.
- inn name See house name.
- inorganic Denoting a sound that does not belong to the original form of a word or name and which has been added later, often for ease of pronunciation or by analogy with other words or names. Inorganic sounds may be prosthetic, intrusive, or excrement.

intervocalic Of a consonant, occurring between two vowels.

intrusive Denoting a sound or syllable that has been inserted between other sounds or syllables, such as the -t- in Alliston, a variant of Allison.

Irish (Gaelic) The native Celtic language of Ireland.

ism (plural asmā) An Arabic personal name or given name such as Ḥamid ‘praised or praiseworthy’. Asmā taken from Arabic vocabulary words are often used with the definite article al-. Muhammad, the name of the Prophet, is the most popular ism in Islam, with many variant spellings in the Roman alphabet. According to the Hadith, Muhammad himself remarked, ‘The best names [asmā] in the sight of God are ‘Abdullah [“servant of Allah”] and ‘Abd ar-Rahman [“servant of the Merciful”].’

Italian The official language of Italy, a derivative of Latin. It has a wide variety of local dialects.

Italic In historical linguistics, a group of languages spoken in Italy, constituting a branch of the Indo-European family. The surviving Italic languages are Latin and Italian.

Judesmo (also known as Ladino) A Jewish form of Old Spanish, which died out in Spain but, following expulsion of the Jews from Spain in 1492, survived in the Ottoman Empire until at least the 20th century. Traces of the language can still be heard in Istanbul, Thessalonica, and Israel.

Kashmiri The Indo-Aryan language spoken in Jammu and Kashmir.

khalsa name Among Sikhs, the name Singh ‘lion’ (for men) or Kaur ‘princess’ (for women), adopted during the khalsa ceremony, marking the end of adolescence and initiation into the Sikh community.

Khmer See Cambodian.

knight In medieval Europe, a male attendant or retainer, especially one who held land on condition that he served his feudal superior (typically, the king) as a mounted soldier.

Korean The official language of North and South Korea.

kunya A type of nickname used in some Arabic-speaking countries, formed with abū ‘father of’ or umm ‘mother of’. The Prophet Muhammad was known by his kunya Abū Qasem ‘father of Qasem’, and Qasem was indeed the name of his son. However, a kunya could be and often was conventionalized: a childless person or a newborn child could be given a kunya. The Prophet’s wife Ayesha was known by the kunya Umm ‘Abdullah ‘mother of Abdullah’, although she was in fact childless. In Iran, a kunya is often metaphorical or aspirational rather than literal, for example Abū-l Fad ‘father of bounty’ (i.e. endowed with bounty). In the Indian subcontinent, the kunya is used only informally and literally within the family circle, with reference to an actually extant child.

labio-dental A speech sound made when one lip (usually the lower lip) is in contact with the teeth, such as /f/ and /v/.

Ladino See Judesmo.

langue d’oc The vernacular language of southern France. See Occitan and compare langue d’oil: ‘oc’ and ‘oil’ are the southern and northern forms respectively of the word for ‘yes’.

langue d’oil The standard French language as spoken in north central France. Compare langue d’oc.

laqab: In Arabic, a type of distinguishing nickname, for example al-Aswad ‘the Black’, al-Asad ‘the Lion’, al-Hajji ‘the person who has made the pilgrimage to Mecca’.

Latin The language of ancient Rome, a member of the Indo-European language family. Through its use as the official written and spoken language of the Roman Empire, vernacular forms of Latin (generally known as Vulgar Latin) arose in different places, giving rise to the modern Romance languages (principally Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, French, and Romanian). The written form of Late Latin became the language of the western Christian Church from the 3rd century onwards, and was the language of St Jerome’s translation of the Vulgate Bible. Medieval Latin was widely used in western Europe as the language of ecclesiastical and secular administration from the 9th century onwards.

latinize To change the form of a word or name so that it conforms to the usual forms of words in the Latin language, as when English Smith and German Schmidt are translated as Latin Faber or the Middle English female personal name Tibot is recorded as Tibota in Medieval Latin documents.

Latvian The language of Latvia, a member of the Balto-Slavic branch of the Indo-European family, closely related to Lithuanian.

lengthening A phonetic development whereby pronunciation of a vowel changes so that it is perceived as longer in duration, as in the family name Arthurton, a variant spelling of Atherton that reflects a lengthening of /æ/ to /a:/ in the Norfolk dialect. (Compare northern and southern English pronunciations of path.)

lenition In Celtic languages, a change in the articulation of a consonant in certain grammatical contexts, often preserving the place of articulation but changing the manner (e.g. a stop being altered to the corresponding fricative in Irish and Welsh, or a voiceless consonant becoming voiced in Welsh). For example, the Irish family name Mac Páidín (McPadden) alternates with the lenited form Mac Pháidín (McFadden). The process of lenition has resulted in a complete change in the phonetic value of some consonants; indeed, Irish initial F- may be lost completely due to lenition after Ó or Mac, so that Flynn alternates with Lynn. In Welsh, the relationship between pairs of names such as Baughan and Vaughan is explained by the fricative type of lenition; the relationship between the Welsh family name Dew and the Welsh word tew ‘stout’ illustrates the voicing type of lenition. See mutation.

Levant, the A traditional name for a vaguely defined geographical area consisting of the countries bordering on the eastern Mediterranean, including Lebanon, Syria, Cyprus, and sometimes also Turkey, Greece, and Egypt.

- liquid With reference to a speech sound, a consonant produced by allowing the air stream to flow relatively freely around the obstruction formed by the tongue, for example the sounds represented by the letters l and r.
- Lithuanian The language of Lithuania, a member of the Balto-Slavic branch of the Indo-European family, closely related to Latvian.
- locative name A family name derived from a location, whether toponymic or topographic.
- long vowel A vowel whose pronunciation is perceived as having a relatively long duration; for example, in standard British English pronunciation, the vowel in food is perceived as long, compared with the vowel in good. In actual fact, perception of vowel length is often due to stress as well as (or instead of) duration.
- lord Someone of superior rank, a master, especially a feudal lord with ownership or possession of a manor.
- lowering With reference to a speech sound, the process of pronouncing a vowel with the tongue further from the roof of the mouth than previously; for example, in late Middle English e is frequently lowered to a before r, giving rise to spellings like Clark for Middle English clerk.
- Low German Any of the large group of non-standard German dialects spoken in northern Germany, closely related to Dutch. Compare High German.
- Macedonian A southern Slavic language spoken in Macedonia. It is closely related to Bulgarian, with a substantial component borrowed from Serbian.
- Malay An Austronesian language that is the official language of Malaysia and Brunei, also spoken in Singapore. It is closely related to Bahasa Indonesia, the language of Indonesia.
- Malayalam A Dravidian language spoken mainly in the south-west Indian state of Kerala.
- Mandarin The standard dialect of Chinese, the official language of both mainland China and Taiwan.
- manor In medieval Britain, a territorial unit consisting of all lands belonging to or under the jurisdiction of a feudal lord.
- Manx The Celtic language formerly spoken in the Isle of Man, closely related to Irish and Scottish Gaelic.
- Marathi An Indo-Aryan language, closely related to Hindi, spoken by the people of the Indian state of Maharashtra.
- Marrano In the 16th and 17th centuries, a Jew in Spain or Portugal who had been forcibly converted to Christianity but continued to practise Judaism in secret. The first Jewish families to come to Britain and Ireland in the 17th century, when Judaism was once again officially allowed, were Marranos.
- medial Denoting or pertaining to a speech sound, a written letter, or a syllable within a word or name that is in a position other than initial or final.
- medieval Of or pertaining to the Middle Ages.
- Medieval Latin The form of the Latin language spoken and written during the medieval period from the 9th century onwards.
- metanalysis The formation of a new word or name through the shifting of a word boundary. For example, atten Ashe ‘at the ash tree’ became atte Nashe, resulting in the family name Nash.
- metaphor A figure of speech in which a word for an object, idea, or event is applied to a thing or person through a perceived resemblance, for example Flint as a nickname for someone who was as hard as flint.
- metathesis A change in the normal sequence of speech sounds within a word or name, usually a reversal of a pair, for example Brittles for Birtles.
- metonymy A figure of speech in which a word, phrase, or name denoting an object, idea, or event is transferred to another, either because the former is a property of the latter, or because the former is associated in some non-metaphorical way with the latter. Family-name examples include Sword for a swordsman or sword-maker, Vigar for someone who possessed vigour, and Yule for someone born at Yuletide.
- metronymic Derived from or relating to the personal name of a mother.
- Middle Ages A historical period generally taken as lasting from the 5th to the 15th centuries.
- Middle Dutch The Dutch language from about 1100 to about 1500.
- Middle English The English language from about 1150 to about 1450.
- Middle French The French language from about 1300 to about 1600.
- Middle High German The German language of southern and central Germany, from the 12th century to about 1500.
- Middle Irish The Irish language from the 10th to the 12th century.
- Middle Low German The cluster of German dialects spoken in northern Germany between the 12th century and about 1500. They were more closely related to Dutch than to Middle High German.
- Middle Welsh The Welsh language from about 1150 to the late 14th century.
- Mizrahi From Hebrew (literally ‘Eastern’), denoting or belonging to Jews from the Middle East, typically Baghdad.
- Mongolian The official language of Mongolia, whose standard form is known as Khalkha.
- monogenetic Denoting a family name that had a unique origin in a single place, being borne by just one family or person when it first came into use.
- monothematic Denoting or pertaining to a personal name made up of a single element, either from a single, meaningful word, or a shortened form of a dithematic name. See, for example, Dodd and Bright (ii).
- morpheme A morphological (structural) unit within a word that cannot be further divided into smaller units.
- morphology The structure or form of words; also, the study of such structures.

mutation With reference to Celtic languages, sound change involving alternation of consonants in certain grammatical contexts at the beginning of words, names, or name elements. In Welsh and Cornish names it takes the form of ‘soft mutation’ or lenition. Thus /t/ mutated to /d/ in Welsh Dew from tew ‘stout’ and /k/ to /g/ in Cornish Tregear, from tre ‘farm’ (+ an ‘the’) + ker ‘fort’ (‘farm by the fort’).

nasab In Arabic, a patronymic formed with ibn ‘son of’ or bint ‘daughter of’, for example Faisal ibn Sa‘ūd ‘Faisal, son of Sa‘ūd’, Muhammad ibn as-Siddīq ‘Muhammad, son of the Righteous’, Mish‘aal bint Fahd ‘Misha‘al, daughter of Fahd’, Dima bint az-Zayyat ‘Dima, daughter of the oil merchant’. An individual (especially a man) may be known by more than one nasab, tracing his or her lineage over several generations.

nasal A speech sound made by expelling air through the nose. In English it describes the consonants /m/, /n/, and /ŋ/ (spelled ng). When a nasal sound ceases to be pronounced the process is referred to as denasalization, as in the loss of /n/ in Middle Dutch Janke, which gave rise to Jakke as a pet form of John.

Ndebele A Bantu language closely related to Zulu, spoken by the Matabele people of Zimbabwe.

nickname An additional name for a person (which may become a hereditary family name), derived from a behavioural or physical characteristic of the bearer or from an object, idea, or event with which the person was associated.

Niger-Congo The family of African languages that includes almost all sub-Saharan languages, including the Bantu languages and the more distantly related languages of West Africa.

nisba In Arabic, a locative surname, generally denoting a person’s birthplace or residence, or the place where the family originated (e.g. al-Tikriti ‘the person from Tikrit’).

nominative A grammatical term for the case form of nouns and adjectives in inflected languages, the main function of which is to identify the subject of a sentence.

Norman In medieval contexts, the northern variety of the Old French language spoken by the inhabitants of Normandy; also, a speaker of this language, one of the people of Scandinavian origin who settled in Normandy from about AD 912 and who conquered England in 1066. Compare Anglo-Norman.

Normanno-Picard Denoting or pertaining to the shared characteristics of the dialects of northern Normandy and Picardy.

oblique As a grammatical term, denoting any of the case forms of nouns and adjectives other than the nominative or vocative in languages such as Latin and Old English. In some dictionaries the French term cas-régime is used in contrast with cas-sujet (the subject case or nominative case).

Occitan A Romance language known in French as langue d’oc, spoken in southern France, including Provençal. Medieval Occitan was very different from the standard Old French language of northern and central France; it was more closely related to Catalan.

occupational name A type of family name denoting someone who worked in a particular trade or occupation.

Old Danish The Danish form of Old Scandinavian.

Old English The West Germanic language of the Anglo-Saxons, spoken in Britain from about the mid-5th century AD up to about 1150.

Old French The French language spoken in northern France from the middle of the 9th century to about 1300. Its principal dialects were Central French (also called Parisian French) and Normanno-Picard. Both dialects were spoken in different parts of Normandy. In Middle English borrowings from Old French, Gillam (French Guillaume) and Chaplain are Central French and William and Caplin are Normanno-Picard. For the language of medieval southern France, see Occitan.

Old High German The German language of southern and central Germany up to the 12th century.

Old Icelandic The form of Old Scandinavian spoken and written in medieval Iceland.

Old Irish The Celtic language spoken in Ireland up to the 9th century. Old Irish is the ancestor not only of Irish but also of Scottish Gaelic and Manx.

1 English, Welsh: relationship name patronymic from the Old Testament personal name, Hebrew Aharon, latinized as Aaron, which is of uncertain, perhaps Egyptian, origin. It occurs as a Jewish personal name in 12th- and 13th-century England. However, the Jews were expelled from England in 1290 and were not officially allowed to return until 1656, so they cannot have been a source for this as a British surname. It comes from the occasional adoption of Aaron as a Christian personal name, especially in the 12th century among senior clergy, who venerated Aaron, brother of Moses, as the first high priest of the Israelites. It could also have been used by high-ranking laity. The Normans brought the personal name to England, where it appears occasionally in 12th-century records and then disappears until its revival after the Reformation. In South Wales, where fixed surnames developed later than in England, it was coined independently after the medieval period, reflecting the enthusiasm for Old Testament given names among Nonconformists.

2 Jewish (Ashkenazic): relationship name patronymic from the Old Testament personal name. Early bearers: Uziel Aarons, 1804, Hannah Aaron, 1820 in Great and Hambro Synagogue Births; Barnet Aaron, clothier, in Census 1851 (Tower Hamlets, Middx); Julius Aarons, born in Prussia, in Census 1881 (London); Emanuel Aaron, born in Poland, in Census 1881 (London); Jacob Aarons, born in Poland, in Census 1881 (London); Abraham Aaron, born in Prussia, in Census 1881 (Lancs); Israel Aaron, general dealer, born in Germany, in Census 1901 (Blackburn, Lancs).

Early bearers: John Aberye, 1563, John Aubry, 1594 in IGI (Icklingham, Suffolk); Marie Aberie, 1609, Titus Aabery, 1637, James Abree, 1674 in IGI (Norwich); George Abra, 1823 in IGI (Kings Lynn, Norfolk); Edmundus Abrye, 1607 in IGI (Balsham, Cambs); Margaretta Abree, 1608 in IGI (Dullingham, Cambs); Thomas Abrey, 1872 in IGI (Melbourn, Cambs); Thomas Abrye, 1591 in IGI (Milton Bryant, Beds); Ann Aberrie, 1612, Thomas Abrey, 1652 in IGI (Luton, Beds); Philip Aberie, 1612 in IGI (Potton, Beds).

3 English: variant of Albury. The 1579 example below may alternatively belong to (2).

Further information: Aldborough Hatch (along with Aberly House) in Ilford (Essex), which is on record as Albrorhhatchcrosse in 1456 and Al(d)borough Hacche in 1486–1546, must surely be associated with Johanne Albourgh, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Barking, Essex), but it seems more likely that the place-name derives from the surname than vice versa.

Early bearers: Johanne Albourgh, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Barking, Essex); Stephen Alborgh, 1456 in The Essex Review 72 (Essex); Johanna Aubrey, 1579 in IGI (Theydon Garnon, Essex); Elizabeth Abree, 1598 in IGI (Belchamp Walter, Essex); John Abrie, 1615 in IGI (Little Yeldham, Essex); Nathaniel Alborie, 1624, Thomas Albery, 1637, Nathaniel Abury, 1686 in IGI (Good Easter, Essex); John Aberry, 1662 in Hearth Tax (Essex); Samuel Abery, 1767 in IGI (Chelmsford, Essex); James Abrey, in Census 1881 (Essex, Suffolk).

1 English: relationship name from the Old Testament personal name Abraham. Middle English Habraham, Abraam, and Abram are French forms introduced after the Norman Conquest. For the etymology of this name, see (3).

Further information: Abraham occurs occasionally as a Christian name from the 5th century on the Continent, but not in England until Domesday Book (1086, the name of a priest). It was a rare personal name in pre-Reformation England, so it probably owes its occurrence as a surname in Cornwall and in the south and east midlands to single progenitors. Yorks examples of the surname, like those in Lancs, may alternatively belong under (2) below. Variation of the surname form by addition of excrement -s is post-medieval and occurs frequently in the midlands.

Early bearers: given names: Abraham de Strattuna, 1170–5 in Danelaw Documents (Lincs); Abraham le Tynnere of Cornewaille, 1357 in Black Prince’s Register (Bodmin, Cornwall); Abraham Tanner’, 1379 in Poll Tax (Northwood, Hants); Abraham Fletcher, 1377 in Poll Tax (Deddington with members, Oxon); Abraham de Bilburgh’, 1379 in Poll Tax (Bilbrough, WR Yorks); Abraham filius Ade, 1379 in Poll Tax (Giggleswick, WR Yorks).

2 English: see Abram.

3 Jewish (Ashkenazic): relationship name from the Old Testament personal name Abraham, Abram, sometimes with genitival -s. The patriarch was called Abram, conventionally understood as ‘father of height’, until given his new name at age 99 by God, said to mean ‘a father of many nations’ (Genesis 17:5). See also Abrahamson.

Early bearers: Jacob Asmisfurt Abraham, 1780 Great and Hambro Synagogue Births (London); Barnet Abram, born in Prussia, in Census 1871 (Manchester, Lancs); Alexander Abrahams, born in Germany, in Census 1881 (London); Simon Abraham, born in Russia, in Census 1881 (Manchester, Lancs); Samuel Abrahams, born in Russia, in Census 1881 (Manchester, Lancs); Julius Abrahams, born in Poland, in Census 1881 (Whitechapel, Middx); Moses Abraham, born in Poland, in Census 1881 (Saint George in the East, Middx); Salman Abrams, born in Russia, in Census 1881 (Hackney, Middx).

Abson

- Current frequencies: GB 524, Ireland 1
- GB frequency 1881: 343
- Main GB location 1881: WR Yorks

English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Abbe + -son. Abbe was a pet form of the female personal name Aubrey, latinized as Albreda. Redmonds notes that in 1373 a lady called Aubrey Driffeld held land in Swinton (WR Yorks), where the surname Abson is first recorded in 1379, and from where it later ramified in southern WR Yorks.

Further information: Middle English Abbe may also have been a pet form of the relatively rare male names Abel, Abraham, and Absalom, but there is no evidence for them in the Swinton area. Derivation as a locative name from Abson (Gloucs) is unlikely in view of the medieval and modern distributions, which are centred in WR Yorks between Rotherham and Wakefield.

surnames: Roger son of Abbe, 1297 in Gringley Extent, identical with Roger filio Albrede, 1272–1307 in Gringley Rental (Gringley on the Hill, Notts); Willelmus Abson, 1379 in Poll Tax (Swinton, WR Yorks); Richard Abson, 1585 in IGI (Barnburgh, WR Yorks); William Abson, 1595 in Sheffield Jackson Catalogue (WR Yorks); George Abson, 1601 in IGI (Bolton on Dearne, WR Yorks); William Abson, 1717 in IGI (Wakefield, WR Yorks).

Abu

- Current frequencies: GB 339, Ireland 6
- GB frequency 1881: 0

Arabic, Muslim: from the Arabic word abū ‘father’. Further information: In Muslim names this word is used to form the ‘kunya’ (name meaning ‘father of’) in combination with the name of a man’s child, usually his first-born son. Thus, a man might be addressed as Abū Hasān ‘father of Hasan’ rather than by his own personal name. In traditional Muslim society, a man is generally known and addressed by his kunya, rather than by his ism (his personal name), use of which outside the family can seem unduly familiar.

Abubakar

- Current frequencies: GB 404, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 0

Muslim: from the Arabic personal name Abū-Bakr ‘father of Bakr’, a personal name meaning ‘young camel’.

Further information: Abu Bakr was the name of the first of the ‘rightly guided’ khalifs (lived 573–634; ruled 632–634). He was the father-in-law, staunch supporter of Muhammad, and principal military leader during the early years of Islam. This is therefore a popular given name among Muslims.

The second -a- in -bakar often indicates an origin in a non-Arabic speaking part of the Muslim world, e.g. Sir Abubakar Tafawa Balewa, former prime minister of Nigeria.

Ace

Variants: Aze, Hayes, Hase

- Current frequencies: GB 358, Ireland 12
- GB frequency 1881: 254
- Main GB location 1881: Glamorgan

Norman, English: (i) relationship name from Old French Ace, Asse, Asce, all forms of the Continental Germanic male personal name Az(z)ō, Atso, Adso, or possibly Aza (female). These were pet forms of Continental Germanic compound names formed with Adal- ‘noble’, such as Adalbert (later Albert) and Adalheidis (later Alice). The middle consonant could be voiced or unvoiced, and the voiced form may have become identified with Aze, Hayes, Hase from other origins. (ii) variant of Hayes.

surnames, England: Benedict Ace, 1230 in Close Rolls (Hants); John Ace, 1246–89 in History of Saint Barts Hospital (London); Geoffrey Aze, 1296 in Subsidy Rolls (Sussex); John Ace, 1337, William Ace, 1523 in Gloucester Archives.

surnames, Wales: John Ace, 1614, William Ase, 1619 in IGI (Penard, Glamorgan); Cherity Ase, 1642 in IGI (Swansea, Glamorgan); Thomas Ace, 1671 in IGI (Llanrhidian, Glamorgan); John Ace, 1681 in National Library of Wales (Oxwich, Glamorgan).

Variants: Ackland

- Current frequencies: GB 232, Ireland 1
  - GB frequency 1881: 101
  - Main GB location 1881: ER Yorks
- English: locative name from either Acklam (ER Yorks) or West Acklam (NR Yorks), both of which are recorded as Aclun in 1086, Acclum in the 12th century. The etymology of the place-names is uncertain. They possibly contain Old Scandinavian **ak(k)ul*- ‘ankle’ (used in Norwegian place-names with the sense ‘slope’) in the dative plural form **ak(k)lum*, i.e. ‘(place) at the slopes’. Alternatively, they may derive from an Old English **āc-lēah* ‘oak wood, oak-tree clearing’ in the dative plural form **āc-lēum*, i.e. ‘(place) at the oak-tree clearings’.

Early bearers: William de Acclum, 1185 in Templars Records (Yorks); Johannem de Acclum, 1269 in Assize Rolls (Northumb); Walto de Acclom, Rogero Acclm, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Kingerby, Lincs); Robert de Acclom, 1334 in London Letter Books E (London); Geoffrey Acclum, 1341 in Lincs Royal Inquest (Lincs); Robertus de Acclom’, 1377 in Poll Tax (Pickering, NR Yorks); Galfrido de Acclom’, 1381 in Poll Tax (York); Robert Aclam, 1534 in York Freeman’s Register; Mary Aclam, 1568 in IGI (Hackness, NR Yorks); Robertus Aclam, 1589, Thomas Acklam, 1707 in IGI (Brandesburton, ER Yorks); Wil. ### Ackley

- GB frequency 1881: 70
- Main GB location 1881: scattered in England: esp. Cumb, Lancs, and Cheshire

1 English: locative name from Aycliffe (Durham), which is recorded as Aicle alias Aicliffe in 1632. The medieval record shows two distinct types: on the one hand there are forms such as Acleia in the 12th century, Aykley in 1555, which suggest that the place-name derives from Old English āc ‘oak, oak-tree’ + lēah ‘open woodland’, while on the other hand there are forms such as Aclyff in 1361, Aykliffe in 1581, which point rather to Old English āc + clif ‘cliff, bank’. It is uncertain whether two originally separate names (perhaps referring to Great Aycliffe and School Aycliffe respectively) have merged, or one type is a later development of the other. There may be a pre-Conquest reference to Aycliffe in the form Aclea in 782, and on balance it seems best to take this as the basis for the etymology and surmise that -clif arose as a hypercorrect variant, with f representing a dialect pronunciation of final h. However, matters are further complicated by the relatively early spelling Heaclif in 1109, in which the first element seems to be Old English hēah ‘high’.

Early bearers: forms with final -y [... de] Acley, about 1220 in Durham Place-Names (Durham); Luciana de Acley, 1296 in Durham Halmote Rolls (Aycliffe, Durham); Mary Acolay, 1691 in IGI (Bishop Wearmouth, Durham); Edmund Ackouley, 1724 in IGI (Whalley, Lancs); Ann Ackley, 1760 in IGI (Crosthwaite, Cumb); John Akely, 1762, George Aikley, 1764 in IGI (Houghton le Spring, Durham). forms with final -f John de Aclyf, 1371, Andrew de Aclyf, 1392 in Patent Rolls (Newcastle upon Tyne, Northumb); Mary Acliff, 1789 in IGI (Northleach, Gloucs); Hannah Acliff, 1798 in IGI (Houghton le Spring, Durham).

Acum

- Main GB location 1881: Lancs and Cheshire
  - Main Irish location 1847–64: Mayo and Galway
- English, Irish: locative name from any of the numerous places so named in England, notably those in Shropshire. Acton in Lydbury, Acton Burnell and Acton Pigott, Boreatton in Baschurch, Shotatton in Ruyton of the Eleven Towns, Acton Reynald, Acton Round, and Acton Scott (all Shrops) are each recorded as Acton in medieval records. Examples in other counties include Acton Bridge, Acton by Nantwich, and Acton Grange (all Cheshire), Acton (Denbighs), Acton Turville (Gloucs), Acton Beauchamp (Herefs), Acton (Middx), Acton and Old Felton (Northumb), Acton Trussell (Staffs), and Acton (Suffolk). All of these place-names derive from Old English āc 'oak, oak-tree' + tūn 'settlement, estate'. Further information: The Worcs Actons had their seat at Wolverton Hall near Pershore from the 16th century onwards. They are descended from Sir Roger Acton, captain of Ludlow Castle, who was executed for treason in 1414. In Ireland the surname has been established in Connacht since the 17th century. The historian Lord Acton (1834–1902) came of a Roman Catholic Shrops family first recorded with William de Acton in the reign of Edward III (1327–77). A branch of the latter family in Italy was established there founded by the brothers Joseph Acton (1737–1830) and John Francis Acton (1736–1811), both of whom served the King of Naples. Early bearers: England Hugh de Acton', 1194 in Pipe Rolls (Shrops); Warin de Aketon, 1202–3 in Feet of Fines (Essex); Ingelard' de Acton', 1256 in Shrops Eyre Roll (Wenlock, Shrops); Reginaldi de Acton', 1256 in Shrops Eyre Roll (Shrops); John de Acton, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Worcs); Richard Acton, 1421–2 in Feet of Fines (Warwicks); Thomas Acton, 1514 in PROB 11 (Longnor, Shrops); Thomas Acton, 1524 in Subsidy Rolls (Acton Scott, Shrops); Cristionn Acton, 1541 in IGI (Nantwich, Cheshire); John Acton, 1566 in IGI (Eccles, Lancs). ### Agg

Variants: Egg

- Current frequencies: GB 336, Ireland 14
- GB frequency 1881: 273
- Main GB location 1881: Gloucs

Early bearers: Henry Hagge, Henry Agge, 1230 in Pipe Rolls (Somerset); Michael Hag', 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Stokenham, Devon); Vincent Hag, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Totnes, Devon); Julian' Hagge, 1377 in Poll Tax (Dartmouth, Devon); Ursula Agg, 1578 in IGI (Cirencester, Gloucs); Anne Agge, 1588 in IGI (Winchcomb, Gloucs); Margaret Agg, 1598 in IGI (Castlemorton, Worcs); Henry Agg, 1603 in IGI (Norwich, Norfolk); Elizabeth Hagge, 1614 in IGI (Bucklebury, Berks); John Agg, 1661 in IGI (Saint Bartholomew the Less, London); John Agge, 1674 in IGI (Bagendon, Gloucs); Priscilla Agg, 1696 in IGI (Holborn, Middx); James Agg, 1699 in IGI (Coln Saint Dennis, Gloucs); Ann Agg, 1735 in IGI (Kintbury, Berks); Jaen Hagg, 1749, Thomas Agg, 1808 in IGI (Calne, Wilts); Mary Hagg, 1790 in IGI (Inkpen, Berks).

2 English: locative name of uncertain origin. Middle English hagg (Old Scandinavian hogg) 'woodland set aside for cutting' seems unlikely in SW England, for the term is recorded only in northern counties (see Hagg). Old English haga 'hedge, enclosure' normally becomes Middle English haw not hag, and Old English **hagga* 'haw, fruit of the hawthorn' is unlikely to form a simplex place-name or locative surname, though it might lie behind Hag Hill in Great Hinton (Wilts), recorded as Hagg Hill, 1625 in Place-Names of Wilts, p. 142. The loss of initial H- in Agg for Hagg is commonplace in SW dialects.

Early bearers: Johanne atte Hag, Ricardo atte Hag, 1379 in Poll Tax (Ramsbury, Wilts).

- 1 Norman, Scottish, English: locative name from Agneaux (Manche), which is recorded as Agnels in about 1135, Agneax in about 1210. The place-name apparently derives from Latin agnellus ‘little lamb’, Old French agneau, agnelle ‘lamb’ (Anglo-Norman French aignel, aignau), possibly denoting a sheep farm. For a similar toponymic application of an animal name compare the place-names Vieilles (Eure), from Latin vitula, Old French veittle, veile ‘heifer’. Some post-medieval examples cited here are likely to belong under (2).
Further information: A family called Agnew was granted the hereditary post of sheriff of Galloway by King David II.

Early bearers: England Mabel de Aignaus, Mabel de Agniws, 1208–9 in Pleas; Robert de Ayneaus, 1227 in Curia Regis Rolls (Suffolk); Robert de Aygnel, 1249 in Assize Rolls (Wilts); Thomas de Aygneus, 1282 in Patent Rolls (Bucks); Thomas de Aigneux, 1322 in Patent Rolls (Northants); Andrew Agnew, 1701 in IGI (Newcastle upon Tyne, Northumb); Margt. ### Akehurst

Variants: Akhurst, Ackhurst

- Current frequencies: GB 1060, Ireland 6
- GB frequency 1881: 783
- Main GB location 1881: Sussex; also Kent

Early bearers: Henry de Akehurst, Henry de Okeherst, 1318 in Court Rolls (Sussex); John Akeherste, 1525 in Subsidy Rolls (Sussex); John Akehurst, 1557 in Canterbury Wills (Probate) (High Halden, Kent); John Akehurst, 1587, Sara Akerst, 1608 in IGI (Heathfield, Sussex); Thomas Akehurst, 1591 in Assize Rolls (Hellingly, Sussex); Edward Akeherst, 1634 in Cranbrook Wills (Kent); Dorothy Akhurst, 1644 in IGI (Lamberhurst, Kent).

References: Place-Names of Sussex, p. 439; Hey, Family Names, pp. 152, 193, 196.

2 English: locative name perhaps also from Okehurst in Billingshurst (Sussex), which is recorded as Okehurst in 1578 (West Sussex Record Office), though there is no clear evidence for forms with initial A-. The place-name has the same etymology as Akehurst Farm in (1).

References: Place-Names of Sussex, p. 150.

3 English: locative name in NE Kent perhaps also from Akhurst Farm in Sheldwich (Kent). The 16th-century bearer John’ of Akers, cited below, constitutes the earliest apparent evidence for the place-name. The etymology of Akhurst Farm is uncertain, and it is quite possible that it takes its name from a surname. If so, the bearers cited here may all belong to (1), or may represent a development of Akers.

Early bearers: John’ of Akers, 1522 in Subsidy Rolls (Faversham hundred, Kent); Thomas Ackers, 1662 in Hearth Tax (Faversham, Kent); William Acurst, 1664 in Hearth Tax (Milton Regis, Kent); Alexander Akehurst, 1670 in IGI (Norton, Kent); Mary Akhurst, 1763 in IGI (Badlesmere, Kent); James Akhurst, 1792 in IGI (Sheldwich, Kent).

  - Main GB location 1881: scattered: esp. SW Wales; Hunts; Lancs

English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Alban, Al(i)bon, Anglo-Norman French Auban, themselves from Latin Albanus, a suffixed derivative of albus ‘white’. Alban and Albon were interchangeable as Middle English personal names. See also Albin.

Further information: The medieval surname forms are comparable with the different pronunciations of the town name Saint Albans (Herts), recorded in English as (Sancte) Albanes stow, 1007 and Seynt Albones, 1421, and in Anglo-Norman French as la ville de Seint Auban, 1308–27 in Place-Names of Herts. According to legend, Alban was the name of the first British Christian martyr (3rd century). The town grew around the Anglo-Saxon abbey that housed Saint Alban’s shrine, the supposed place of his execution, next to the Romano-British town of Verulamium.

1 English: relationship name from the Old French and Middle English personal name Albert, Aubert, from Continental Germanic Adalbert, composed of the elements adal ‘noble’ + beraht ‘bright’. The Old English cognate, Æðelbeorht, occurs in Domesday Book as Ailbertus, Ailbriht, and once as Albricht. The Ailbertus of 1066 in Ely Inquisition (Cambs) appears in Domesday Book as Albertus; thus Albert may in some cases be identical with Albright. Some of the following post-medieval bearers may alternatively belong with (2).

surnames: Philippus filius Alberti, Auberti, 1211 in Curia Regis Rolls (Dorset); Robert Alberd, Albert, 1221 in Assize Rolls (Warwicks); Isabella Aubert, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Suffolk); Ricardus Alberd, 1377 in Poll Tax (Northants); Martinus Albert, 1379 in Poll Tax (Norfolk); Thomas Albert, 1548 in IGI (Westminster, Middx); Robert Albert, 1579 in IGI (Great Yarmouth, Norfolk); Joseph Albert, 1702, Frances Aubert, 1710 in IGI (Knowle, Warwicks); Sarah Albert, 1729 in IGI (Worcester, Worcs); William Aubert, 1778 in IGI (Hampton Lovett, Worcs); James Albert, 1782 in IGI (Ashton under Lyne, Lancs).

Alberts

- Current frequencies: GB 278, Ireland 0

Albertson

- Current frequencies: GB 25, Ireland 1
- GB frequency 1881: 22
- Main GB location 1881: Durham; London

English: relationship name perhaps from the Middle English personal name Albert + -son, but the distribution suggests continental origin involving cognate elements.

Further information: This name is rare in Britain but is thriving in the USA.

Albery

- GB frequency 1881: 96
- Main GB location 1881: scattered: esp. Dorset; London; Lancs; Lanarks
- Main Irish location 1847–64: Armagh

English: (i) generally, this is a variant of Alban. (ii) relationship name; in some cases it is from the Middle English and Old French personal name Albin, Latin Albinus, but this has mostly been absorbed into Alban, Albon, see Alban. Albin had alternative Anglo-Norman French forms Aubin and Obin, which have survived as modern surnames.

Albinson

Further information: It is sometimes mistakenly supposed that Middle English Albin could have been a nickname for a person of white hair or complexion, but this confuses the etymology of the personal name with that of the surname. Latin Albinus, an ancient Roman cognomen, was a diminutive of albus ‘white’, and may originally have been used of someone with fair skin or fair hair, but in its later use as an Old French personal name there is no evidence that it retained any such semantic content. Nor was there an Old French word **albin*, **aubin* ‘white’ from which an Anglo-Norman French or Middle English nickname could have been derived.

Early bearers: given names: Albinus, 1148–53 in Bury (Suffolk), 1154–89 in Gilbertine Charters (Lincs); Obin Kinel, 1202 in Assize Rolls (Lincs).

  - Main GB location 1881: Lancs and Cheshire
- 1 English: locative name from Alderley (Cheshire), which is recorded as Aldredelie in 1086, Aldridelegh in 1290.

Early bearers: [. . . de] Aldridley, 1274, [. . . de] Aldrudeleg', 1285, [. . . de] Aldireleg', 1288, [. . . de] Aldreleigh, 1313, [. . . de] Aldurleg, 1323 in Place-Names of Cheshire (Cheshire); William Alderley, 1698 in IGI (Stretford, Lancs); John Alderley, 1706 in IGI (Wybunbury, Cheshire); Samuel Alderlay, 1714 in IGI (Wigan, Lancs); Thos Alderley, 1743 in IGI (Northenden, Cheshire).

References: Place-Names of Cheshire, vol. 1, pp. 94–5, 99–100.

2 English: occasionally perhaps a variant of Aldersley, but the relationship may be the other way round.

Alderman

- Current frequencies: GB 1663, Ireland 3
- GB frequency 1881: 1158
- Main GB location 1881: widespread: esp. Bucks and Northants, Hants and Surrey

English: status name from Middle English alderman (Old English ealdormann). Before the Conquest this term denoted a high official with authority over a district; by the 12th century it had come to denote a member of the governing body of a city or borough or the governor of a craft guild.

Early bearers: Adam le alderman, 12th cent. in Danelaw Documents (Lincs); John Alderman, 1175 in Pipe Rolls (Sussex); Rychard Alderman, 1562 in IGI (Rushton, Northants); Thome Alderman, 1563 in IGI (Scopwick, Lincs); Nicholas Alderman, 1584 in IGI (Exeter, Devon); John Alderman, 1587 in IGI (Ipswich, Suffolk); Elizabeth Alderman, 1599 in IGI (Axbridge, Somerset).

Alders

  - GB frequency 1881: 90
  - Main GB location 1881: Hants, IoW, and Sussex
- English: locative name from an unidentified place, probably in eastern Hants, with a name derived from Old English alor 'alder-tree' + slæd 'valley'.
- Early bearers: Mary Alderslade, 1551 in IGI (Bentley, Hants); Denis Alderslade, 1563 in IGI (Lodsworth, Sussex); Rychard Alderslad, 1573 in IGI (Headley, Hants); John Alderslate, 1576 in IGI (Farnham, Surrey); Lawrence Alderslade, 1620 in IGI (Alton, Hants); Elisabeth Alderslade, 1634 in IGI (Rogate, Sussex); Anne Olderslade, 1734 in IGI (Winchester, Hants).

Aldersley

Variants: Alderley

- Current frequencies: GB 236, Ireland 1
- GB frequency 1881: 285
- Main GB location 1881: WR Yorks and Lancs

1 English: locative name possibly, in the form Alderleys, from a lost medieval settlement in Allerton near Bradford (WR Yorks) later recorded as Aldersley with a transitional form seen in 1545, and perhaps first found in the compound name Aldeleysike in 1292. It is not always distinguishable from Alderley in (2).

Further information: The connection with the place mentioned is uncertain. It may also be confounded with another Alderley associated with Almondbury (WR Yorks), recorded in the names of Robert de Aldonley, 1286 in Wakefield Court Rolls (Rastrick, WR Yorks); Thomas de Aldeneley, Alan de Aldelay, 1307, Alice de Aldo(u)nlay, 1352 in Wakefield Court Rolls (WR Yorks).

Early bearers: John de Aldoleghs, 1354 in Court Rolls (Bradford, WR Yorks); William Alderleys, 1488 in York Registry Wills (Bradford, WR Yorks); John Aldersles, 1545 in Thoresby Society 11 (Allerton, WR Yorks); Alicia Alderslay, 1562, Edward Alderslaye, 1581 in IGI (Halifax, WR Yorks); Dyonisius Aldersley, 1577 in IGI (Giggleswick, WR Yorks); [. . .] Alderley, 1584 in WR Yorks Surnames (WR Yorks); William Aldersley, 1586 in IGI (Kildwick, WR Yorks); Maria Alderslay, 1603 in IGI (Almondbury, WR Yorks); William Aldersley, 1607 in IGI (Burnley, Lancs); Thomas Aldersley, 1638 in IGI (Colne, Lancs).

2 English: occasionally perhaps a variant of Alderley, but the relationship may be the other way round.

Early bearers: Elizabeth Alderley, 1711, Elen Aldersley, 1723 in IGI (Stretford, Lancs).

Alderson

Variants: Autherson, Adderson, Addison

- Current frequencies: GB 5382, Ireland 11
- GB frequency 1881: 4153
- Main GB location 1881: N England: esp. Durham, WR Yorks, and NR Yorks

English: relationship name from the Middle English female personal name Aldus (see Aldous) + -son.

Alderson has sometimes become Auderson, then Autherson, and occasionally Aderson, which may have become merged with Addison.

Further information: In early Modern English, the consonant /r/ was sometimes vocalized in unstressed syllables and absorbed into the preceding vowel. This led to the occasional use of -er- as an alternative spelling of -u- or -e- in unstressed syllables.

Early bearers: Willemo filio Aldus, 1301 in Subsidy Rolls (Wilton cum West Coatham, NR Yorks); Robertus Alduson', 1379 in Poll Tax (Todwick, WR Yorks); Franciscus Awderson, 1559, George Auderson, 1683 in IGI (Stainton in Cleveland, NR Yorks); Ralph Alderson, 1572 in IGI (Cowthorpe, WR Yorks); Bartle Auderson, 1585 in IGI (Thirsk, NR Yorks); Alice Awderson, 1595, Ann Autherson, 1737 in IGI (Sculcoates, ER Yorks); Elizabeth Awderson, 1601, Robert Alderson, 1642, Sarah Autherson, 1663 in IGI (York); Elizabeth Alderson, 1667, Thomas Aderson, 1829 in IGI (Romaldkirk, NR Yorks); Elezebeth Autherson, 1676, John Autherson, 1720, 1819 in IGI (Warter, ER Yorks); Hester Alderson, 1694, Elis. Alderson, 1788 in IGI (Gateshead, Durham); James Alderson, 1742 in IGI (Muker, NR Yorks).

Alderton

Variants: Allerton

- Current frequencies: GB 1686, Ireland 4
- GB frequency 1881: 1331
- Main GB location 1881: E Anglia; Sussex; Durham and Northumb.

English: locative name from any of various places called Alderton (Suffolk, Essex, Northants, Gloucs, Wilts), Aldrington (Sussex), Allerton (Lancs, WR Yorks), or Ollerton (Cheshire, Notts). See also Allerton, Ollerton.

Early bearers: Alexander de Alreton', 1191 in Pipe Rolls (Yorks); John de Aldrinton', 1221 in Assize Rolls (Worcs); Richard Alderton, 1525 in Subsidy Rolls (Sussex); Nicho Alderton, 1560 in IGI (Petworth, Sussex); George Alderton, 1577 in IGI (Ipswich, Suffolk); Mary Alderton, 1621 in IGI (Norwich, Norfolk); James Alderton, 1755 in IGI (Little Welnetham, Suffolk).

Alderwick

- Current frequencies: GB 105, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 62
- Main GB location 1881: Gloucs; also WR Yorks

English: apparently from an unidentified place named with Old English alor 'alder' + Old English wic 'specialized or outlying farm'. However, no medieval bearers have been found to support this, and it is more likely that Alderwick is an altered form of another Wilts name, probably Aldericke. Compare John Aldericke, 1670, John Alderwick, 1679, John Aldric, 1712 in IGI (Broughton Gifford, Wilts), where the spelling -wick appears to be a hypercorrection, mistakenly assuming -ick to be a vulgar pronunciation of -wick. Ald(e)ric(k) (see Aldrick) is a variant of Aldridge.

Early bearers: Jane Alderwicke, 1616 in IGI (Holt, Wilts); George Alderwicke, 1669 in IGI (Great Chalfield, Wilts); John Alderwick, 1679 in IGI (Broughton Gifford, Wilts); Edw. Alderwick, 1744 in IGI (Wotton under Edge, Gloucs); Mary Alderwick, 1754 in IGI (Bath, Somerset); Thomas Alderwick, 1821 in IGI (Thirsk, NR Yorks); George Olderwick, 1832 in IGI (Leonard Stanley, Gloucs).

Aldington

- Current frequencies: GB 172, Ireland 0
  - GB frequency 1881: 205
  - Main GB location 1881: Worcs and Warwicks
- English: locative name from Aldington (Worcs), which is recorded as Aldintona in 1086 and Aldington in 1227, and perhaps also from Aldington (Kent), which is recorded as Ealdintune in about 1090 and Aldyngtone in 1253–4. The place-names probably both mean ‘farmstead associated with a man called Ealda’, from the Old English personal name Ealda + the connective particle -ing- + tūn ‘farmstead, estate’.

Further information: There may have been some confusion with Allington or Adlington.

Aldon

Variants: Aldons

- GB frequency 1881: 40
- Main GB location 1881: Durham; also scattered in SE England

English: locative name from Aldon in Addington (Kent) or, less likely, from Aldon (Shrops) or Aldon (Somerset).

Early bearers: Euota de Aldone, 1317 in Assize Rolls (Kent); Thomas de Aledon, 1321 in London Letter Books F; Thomas de Aldon, knight, 1367 in Patent Rolls (Kent); William Aldons, 1641 in IGI (Earlham, Norfolk); Edmund Aldon, 1684 in IGI (Hingham, Norfolk).

- Current frequencies: GB 1807, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 1211
- Main GB location 1881: E Anglia

English: relationship name from the Middle English female personal name Aldus, a pet form of any of several names beginning with Ald- (Old English Eald-) such as Aldith (see Allday) and Aldred or Aldrith (see Awdry). It was particularly common in Yorks, the NE Midlands, and E Anglia in the 13th century.

Further information: A genealogy has been traced to William Aldous (d. 1528) of Fressingfield, Suffolk. The name is first recorded in Fressingfield in 1327. It is also recorded as the name of the rector of Wreningham, Norfolk, in 1393.

1 English relationship name from the Middle English personal name Al(d)red or El(d)red, an overlap or merger of three Old English names, Ealdræd (or Aldræd), Æðelræd, and Ælfræd. Old English Ealdræd and its variant Aldræd regularly appear in Middle English as either Eldred or Aldred, depending on dialect. These names originate in eald ‘old’, æðel ‘noble’, or elf ‘elf’, respectively, + ræd ‘counsel’. The pronunciation of Old English Æðelræd was often shortened, occurring in Middle English as Ailred, Eilred, Alred, and Elred. Subsequently a transitional consonant -d- was inserted between the l and the r, resulting in A(i)ldred and E(i)ldred. Middle English forms of Old English Ælfræd sometimes lost the medial -f-, becoming Alred or Elred, and then Aldred, Eldred. All three personal names were largely obsolete by the end of the 13th century. Initial Ald- has sometimes altered to Aud- (a 15th-century change), and final -red to -ret(t) or -rit(t).

Early bearers: given names: Ældred, Ældret, Aldret, Eldred, Eldret, 1086 in Domesday Book; Aldret de Windegate, about 1145–65 in Hatton’s Book of Seals (Northumb); Eldredus, 1161–77 in Ramsay Abbey Court Rolls (Herts); Alret, 1086 in Domesday Book (Kent); Eilredus de Mannest’, 1198 in Curia Regis Rolls (Kent); Alredus de Wicham, 1206 in Curia Regis Rolls (Kent).

surnames: Robert Alred, 1198 in Pipe Rolls (Kent); Godardus filius Ailred’, 1205 in Pipe Rolls (London); Roger Aldredus, 1207 in Pipe Rolls (Devon); Golding Aldred, before 1224 in Clerkenwell Cartulary (Middx);

1 English: relationship name from the Middle English personal names Alrich or Elrich and Aldrich or Eldrich, representing any one of three Old English personal names, Æðelric, Ælfric, and Ealdric, formed respectively from æðel 'noble', ælf 'elf, sprite', and eald 'old, honoured' + **ric* 'ruler'. Al(d)- can develop to Ol(d)-, especially in Devon and Yorks. In Middle English, -rich was sometimes altered to -riht and -rit, leading to the modern forms Allwright and Alldritt. In post-medieval pronunciation -rich has commonly developed to -ridge. Less often the final syllable appears as -ric(k). See also Etheridge, which is also from Æðelric but shows an early loss of -l.

Further information: The history of these Old English personal names and their derived surnames is complicated by a great deal of variation in their Old and Middle English forms, with confusion between the different names. The commonest Old English source name was Æðelric, which appears distinctively in Middle English as Aylrich and Eylrich, but also very frequently as Alrich, Elrich, Aldrich, and Eldrich. Similarly, while Old English Ælfric frequently appears distinctively as Middle English Alfrich and Elfrich, the -f- was often subsequently lost, giving rise to Alrich and Elrich, which in turn became Aldrich and Eldrich through the development of a transitional consonant -d- between l and r. The rare Old English name Ealdric (a West Saxon and Kentish form) will have given rise to both Eldrich and Aldrich in southern Middle English. Old English **Aldric*, the equivalent Anglian dialect form, is not on record but would have appeared as Middle English Aldrich in the midlands and north. The final consonant of Old English -ric had two pronunciations, /tʃ/ and /k/, reflected in the Middle English spellings -rich and -ric(k).

Early bearers: given names: Adelric, Aelricus, Alricus, Alrich, Elric, 1086 in Domesday Book; Ældricus (also Ailricus) de Burc, 1086 in Domesday Book (Suffolk); Elricus filius Leppe 1154–89 in Danelaw Documents (Lincs); Ailricus or Elricus Strut, 1186–8 in Bury Saint Edmunds Kalendar (Suffolk); Aldrich (also Ailrich), 1220 in Curia Regis Rolls (Surrey); Ailrich Carpenter', 1228 in Assize Rolls (Suffolk).

Greek (typically Cypriot): relationship name from an old genitive case of the Greek personal name Alexandros, see Alexander.

Alexis

- Current frequencies: GB 443, Ireland 1
- GB frequency 1881: 1

French: relationship name, patronymic from the personal name Alexis, ultimately from Greek aléxios 'helping, defending'. In Britain the history of this surname is unclear: it was present among French immigrants in the 19th century, but is now also frequent among West Indians, possibly via formerly French possessions in the Caribbean.

Early bearers: Fanny Alexis, 1797, Sarah Alexis, 1803 in IGI (Southwark, Surrey); Nicola Alexis, in Census 1861 (Westminster, Middx); Henry Alexis, in Census 1871 (Lambeth, Surrey); Alice Alexis, Census 1881 (London); Cheron Alexis, born in France, in Census 1891 (Saint Sampson, Guernsey).

Aley

- Current frequencies: GB 244, Ireland 1
- GB frequency 1881: 165

- Main GB location 1881: Essex

Early bearers: Mabilla Aley, 1381 in Poll Tax (Flixton, Suffolk); Sisley Aley, 1540 in IGI (Berkhamsted, Herts); Thomas Alee, 1592 in Place-Names of Herts (Caddington); John Aily, 1615 in IGI (Sawbridgeworth, Herts); Robertus Aley, 1640 in IGI (Barrow on Humber, Lincs); Frances Ailey, 1700 in IGI (Bishops Stortford, Herts); Mary Aley, 1728 in IGI (Epping, Essex).

2 English: relationship name perhaps from the Middle English female personal name Ayleve (from an Old English personal name such as Æðelgifu, composed of the elements æðel 'noble' + gifu 'gift'), with loss of the final consonant; compare Ayliff.

Alfano

Variants: Allfrey, Allfree, Alfry, Elvery

- Current frequencies: GB 134, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 59
- Main GB location 1881: Lancs

English: (i) relationship name from the Middle English personal name Alfrith, Alfrey, Alfray, derived from either the Old English male name Æðelfrið, the Old English female name **Æðelfrið*, or the Continental Germanic male name Adalfrith, both with the same etymology, composed of elements meaning 'noble' and 'peace'. Aufrey and latinized Aufridus show the influence of Anglo-Norman vocalization of /l/ before a consonant. (ii) relationship name from Middle English Alfred, Old English Ælfræd, which may also have developed to Alfrey on the analogy of names in -frið. Compare Alfred, Avery.

Algar

Variants: Allgar, Alger, Agar, Agard, Ager, Agger, Augar, Auger, Augur, Elgar, Elger

- Current frequencies: GB 934, Ireland 21
- GB frequency 1881: 753
- Main GB location 1881: E Anglia; Devon

Early bearers: given names: Alfgarus, Elgar, Ælgar, Algar, 1086 in Domesday Book; Ealgarus, 1086 in Domesday Book; Algar, about 1095 in Bury Saint Edmunds Documents (Suffolk); Ailgarus filius Lucie, 1151–3 in Danelaw Documents (Lincs); Ailgarus, Agare, abbot of Faversham, 1193–9, 1200–4 in Saint Gregory Cartulary urnames: William Algar, 1221 in Assize Rolls (Worcs); Thomas Algar, 1260 in Assize Rolls (Cambs); Robti. Algar, 1544 in IGI (Sutterton, Lincs); Mary Algar, 1546 in IGI (Spexhall, Suffolk); Annam Algar, 1562 in IGI (Wedmore, Somerset); Joheus Algar, 1583 in IGI (Sandbach, Cheshire); Suson Algar, 1603 in IGI (Yealmpton, Devon).

2 English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Alger, Old Scandinavian Alfgeirr, Alger. Auger, if pronounced with a hard g, shows Anglo-Norman French vocalization of /l/ before a consonant, but with a soft g it belongs with Alger.

urnames: Simon Alger, 1221 in Cotton Tiberius B ii (Suffolk); Thomas Alger, 1297 in Earldom of Cornwall Accounts (Yorks).

Algate

Variants: Aldgate

- Current frequencies: GB 82, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 101
- Main GB location 1881: Devon

English: locative name from a lost Aldegat(e) in Beverley or Ald(e)gat(e) in Hull (ER Yorks); or presumably from Aldgate in London, which is recorded as Alegate from 1108 onwards, with the intrusive -d- appearing in the 17th century.

Early bearers: Edricus de Alegat', 1219 in Curia Regis Rolls (Middx); Maud de Alegate, 1252, Ralph de Alegate, 1288 in Patent Rolls (London); Robert de Algate, 1353 in Patent Rolls (Beverley, ER Yorks); Alicia Haldegate, 1379 in Poll Tax (Carlton, WR Yorks); Nicolas Algate, 1576 in IGI (Crediton, Devon); Mathew Allgate, 1582 in IGI (Exeter, Devon); Marie Algat, 1667 in IGI (Plympton Saint Mary, Devon); Joseph Aldgate, 1780 in IGI (South Huish, Devon).

Algeo

Variants: Algie, Alger

- Current frequencies: GB 95, Ireland 15
- GB frequency 1881: 8
- Main GB location 1881: Middx; Lancs
- Main Irish location 1847–64: Donegal and Leitrim

Scottish: nickname; the early spellings Awldioy, Aldjeo, Aldjo, and Aldgeo suggest a term of affection from Scots auld 'old' + joy, jo, joe 'joy, sweetheart, darling, lover' (Old French joi Middle English joi, jo, which can also signify 'good fortune' and 'mirth, music, laughter, jesting'). Alternatively, if the -d- is intrusive, Algeo may be from a phrase 'all joy, all good fortune', used as a farewell. The -ge- in Algeo is another spelling of j, the additional -e- indicating that the g is soft.

Further information: The name has been traced back genealogically to Peter Algeo, a Burgess of Paisley in 1550, whose family is associated with the estate of Inchinnan near Paisley. A history of Renfrew, cited by Black, affirms that the family was 'of Italian origin, the first of them having come from Rome in the suite of one of the abbots of Paisley.' However, this is mere speculation; the name is not Italian.

Early bearers: Scotland William Awldioy, 1518 in Edinburgh Burgh Records (Edinburgh, Midlothian); Peter Algeo, Burgess, 1550 in Protocol Books Glasgow (Paisley, Renfrews); John Algeo, Burgess, 1603 in Laing Charters (Paisley), Peter Aldjeo, advocate, 1628 in Privy Council of Scotland Register (Paisley); Thomas Aldgeo, 1628 in Privy Council of Scotland Register (Paisley); Peter Algeo, 1610 in IGI (Edinburgh, Midlothian); Williame Algeo, 1610, John Aldjo, 1626, John Algeo, 1733 in IGI (Glasgow, Lanarks); Margrat Aljo, 1644 in IGI (Falkirk, Stirlings); John Algeo, 1675, Janet Aljoe, 1725 in IGI (Renfrew, Renfrews); Alexander Algeo, 1718 in IGI (Paisley, Renfrews); Katharine Aljo, 1728 in IGI (Falkland, Fife); David Aljoy, 1830 in IGI (Port Glasgow, Renfrews).

Alger

Variants: Auger, Ager, Algie, Algar

- Current frequencies: GB 702, Ireland 4
- GB frequency 1881: 677

1 English: (i) relationship name; pronounced with a soft g (/dʒ/), this is from the Middle English personal name Alger, representing Old French Alg(i)er, Aug(i)er, Continental Germanic Adalgari, composed of the elements **adal* 'noble' + **gāri* 'spear'. The development to Ager is a late Middle English change from /au/ to /a:/ then /ei/. Compare Dawkin and Dakin. (ii) pronounced with a hard g (/g/), it is usually a variant of Algar, but it might also be a rare variant of Middle English Alker (see Auker), from Old English Ealhhere (ealh 'shrine, temple' + here 'army'), with an Anglo-Norman French pronunciation of /k/ as /g/, as evidenced in Alcher, 1086 in Domesday Book (Devon), alias Algerus, Algherus, 1086 in Exeter Domesday Book.

Early bearers: Walter Alger, 1275 in Subsidy Rolls (Worcs); Henry Auger, 1279 in Hundred Rolls (Hunts); Willelmus filius Auger, 1346 in Subsidy Rolls (Worcs); William Awger, 1498 in York Freeman's Register.

English: relationship name from a Middle English personal name, Alard, Aylard, Adelard, or Elard. This may sometimes be of native English origin, from Old English Æðelheard, composed of the elements æðel 'noble' + heard 'hard, bold', which would normally have developed to Aylard, Alard, and Elard. Alternatively it may be of continental origin, from Continental Germanic Adelard, which developed in Old French to A(a)lard, and in Middle Dutch to Adelaert and Alaert. The continental names were used in post-Conquest England by Normans and Flemings. Alard was sometimes confused with another Continental Germanic name, Agilard, Old French and Middle Dutch Ailard. Alard the Fleming, 1198 in Pipe Rolls, is also called Ayllard, 1193 in Charter Rolls, and Adthelard, 1189–99 (1279) in Hundred Rolls. Alard de Cotekyn of Zeeland, 1311 in Patent Rolls, was another Fleming. Middle English Aylard, Elard, and Ellard are usually from the English name, and Adelard from the continental name, but Alard and Athelard could be from either. Later development of -ard to -ett and -att in surnames means that these personal names may also lie behind some examples of Aylett, Allatt, and Hallett.

Early bearers: given names: Ailardus, Ælard, 1086 in Domesday Book (Devon, Sussex); Adelardus Hornewitesinne, 1125 in London Letter Books C; Aeilardus, 1143–7 in Danelaw Documents (Lincs); Halardus de Weres, before 1150, in Danelaw Documents; Elard de Beisebi, 1161 in Pipe Rolls (Lincs); Aalardus de Middilton', 1179 in Pipe Rolls (Norfolk/Suffolk); Aelardus Iserman, merchant of Holland, 1230 in Close Rolls; Eilardus, 1250 in Assize Rolls (Norfolk); Athelard de Graveni, 1275 in Hundred Rolls (Suffolk).

1 English: relationship name from the Middle English, Old French personal name Alain, Alein (Old Breton Alan, of uncertain origin), the name of a Welsh and Breton saint, which was popular among the Bretons who came over from Normandy with William the Conqueror, particularly in Lincs. Further information: Walter fitz Alan (d. 1177), of Breton descent, first Scottish royal steward, and his son Alan (d. 1204), originators of the Stewart dynasty, were among the first to bear the name in Scotland. The popularity of this name in Scotland is mainly due to this family, with the given name giving rise to the patronymic and thus the surname Alan.

urnames, England: Geoffrey Alein, 1234 in Feet of Fines (Cambs); Roger Alain, about 1246 in Calverley Charters (Yorks); Adam Aleyn, 1249 in Assize Rolls (Wilts); John Alayn, 1249–50 in Inquisitiones post Mortem (Wilts); William Alayn, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Malmesbury, Wilts); John Aleyn, 1371 in Feet of Fines (Gloucs); Johanne Aleyn, 1377 in Poll Tax (Kent); Richard Alen, 1544, Matthias Allyn, 1593 in Feet of Fines (Hunts); Elizabeth Allenn, 1589 in IGI (Goldington, Beds).

Ireland John Alen, 1535 in Fiants Henry §41; John Alen, 1549 in Fiants Edward §445 (Alenscorte by the Newebridge, Kildare); Thomas Alen, Clerk of the Hanaper, 1560 in Fiants Elizabeth §223; Giles Allen, 1565 in Fiants Elizabeth §727 (Dublin); Cormac oge Allen of the Graunge, 1566 in Fiants Elizabeth §935; George Allyn, 1582 in Fiants Elizabeth §3998.

given names, Scotland Alan son of Waltheof of Allerdale, 1139 in History of North Durham (Edrom, Berwicks); Alan son of Walter, royal steward, 1202–4 in Paisley Register (Paisley, Renfrews).

2 English: relationship name occasionally perhaps from the rare Middle English personal name Aline (Old French Adaline, Aaline), a pet form of Continental Germanic names in Adal-, especially Adalheidis, which became Old French Adalaide and Alice. Compare Adeline.

urnames: Richard Alyne, 1275 in Subsidy Rolls (Worcs).

3 Scottish Gaelic: locative name common from 1139 in Scotland, where it may also derive from Gaelic Ailéne, Ailín, from ail 'rock'.

- Current frequencies: GB 363, Ireland 0
  - GB frequency 1881: 235
  - Main GB location 1881: Cambs
- English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Algot. This may represent Old Danish, Old Swedish Algot, Algut (as is likely in the 1086 Notts example) but the name is not otherwise recorded in those parts of England settled by Danes and Swedes before the Conquest. Alternatively it represents Continental Germanic Adalgot, Algot, Middle Dutch Aelgoet, which may have been used by Flemings in post-Conquest England. This is from **adal-* 'noble' + a development of the stem of the Germanic tribal name **Gaut-*.
Early bearers: given names: Algod, 1086 in Domesday Book (Notts); Algotus de Banneberi, 1178 in Pipe Rolls (Oxon). surnames: Iordanus filius Algoti, about 1174 in Clerkenwell Cartulary (London); Philip Halgot, 1190 in Oseney Cartulary (Oxon); Ralph Alegod, Halgot, Halegod, 1200 in Oseney Cartulary (Oxon); Thomas Algod, 1225 in Patent Rolls; Joh. Variants: Alington, Allenden, Adlington

- Current frequencies: GB 838, Ireland 3
- GB frequency 1881: 509
- Main GB location 1881: widespread in England

English: (i) see Adlington. (ii) locative name from Allington (Lincs), which is recorded as Adelingetone in 1086, Athelinton' in 1202, and Athelynton' in 1351, Allington (Dorset), which is recorded as Adelingtone in 1086, Alingetun in 1206, and Athelington in 1227, or Allington by Devizes (Wilts), which is recorded as Adelingtone in 1086, Alingeton in 1196, and Athelinetona in 1242. The place-names probably mean 'farmstead of the princes', from Old English ædeling 'prince, nobleman' (genitive plural ædelinga) + tūn 'farmstead, estate'. (iii) locative name from Allington (Kent), which is recorded as Elentun in 1086 and Alintona in 1175, or East Allington (Devon), which is recorded as Alintone in 1086, Alingeton in 1219, and Allyngthon' in 1242. The place-names probably mean 'farmstead associated with a man called Ælla or Ælle', from the Old English personal name Ælla, Ælle + the connective particle -ing- + tūn 'farmstead, estate'.

Further information: Allington by Amesbury (Wilts) is recorded as Aldintona in 1178, Aldyngton in 1426, and Aldington otherwise Allington in 1769, and Allington in South Stoneham (Hants) is recorded as Ellatune in 1086, Aldintone in 1186, and Aldyngton alias Alyngton in 1445. The place-names probably mean 'farmstead associated with a man called Ealda', from the Old English personal name Ealda + the connective particle -ing- + tūn 'farmstead, estate'. In both cases the appearance of forms without -d- is relatively late, and they seem unlikely to have contributed to the surname Allington. There is no evidence to suggest that they contributed to Aldington either, though the possibility should be allowed.

Early bearers: N England, Midlands, and E Anglia William de Alinton', 1192 in Pipe Rolls (Yorks); Richard de Adligton, 1274 in Hundred Rolls (Lincs); Henry de Alyngton, 1341 in Lincs Royal Inquest (Lincs); William Alyngton, 1479 in Paston Letters; Richard Allington,

Ambler

Variants: Ombler

- Current frequencies: GB 2383, Ireland 7
- GB frequency 1881: 2614
- Main GB location 1881: WR Yorks

1 Norman, English: occupational name from Middle English **amayler*, **amelour* (Old French esmalleur 'enameller', with intrusive b to give **a(u)mbelour*. This seems likely to be the main source, but some of the following early bearers may alternatively belong with (2) or (3).

Further information: William Ambler was mayor of Doncaster in 1717.

Early bearers: Thomas le Amblur, 1276 in Hundred Rolls (Lincs); William le Amayler, 1303 in London Court Rolls; Nicholas le Aumbleour, 1307 in Wakefield Court Rolls (WR Yorks); Simon le Amelour, 1344 in Assize Rolls (Somerset); Robert Ambeler, 1375 in London Pleas; Thoma Ambeler', 1377 in Poll Tax (Saint Saviour, York, Yorks); Willelmo Ambler, 1379 in Poll Tax (Herefs); Willelmus Ameler', 1379 in Poll Tax (Walton, Somerset); Alexander Ambler, 1474 in York Freemen's Register; Jhon Ambler, 1552 in IGI (Chaddesley Corbett, Worcs); Thoms. Ambler, 1562 in IGI (Keighley, WR Yorks); Alicia Ambler, 1564 in IGI (Richards Castle, Herefs); Leonard Ambler, 1584 in IGI (Leeds, WR Yorks).

2 English: nickname perhaps a derivative of Middle English amblen 'to amble'. The name might have been given to one with an ambling gait, possibly even a facetious nickname for a walker or fuller, as suggested by John Ambeler, walker, 1440 in York Freemen's Register. The verb is also recorded from the 14th century onward in the sense 'to ride an ambling horse', so Ambler might have denoted someone who rode such a horse, though because of its gentle pace it was generally preferred by women.

3 English: perhaps a reduced form of an unrecorded Middle English **amblerer* 'dealer in ambler or saddle horses'.

Norman, English: relationship name from the Old French personal name Amis or from the feminine form, Amice. The Old French word amis, Ami is from Latin amicus 'friend', which was used in Late Latin as a term for a man of the lower classes, in particular a slave. There were also derivatives of this as personal names, in particular Amicius (m.) and Amicia (f.). Both were in use as personal names in England and may have contributed to the surname. See also Amey, Amos, Amias, Amiet, Amison.

Amesbury

- Current frequencies: GB 357, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 186
- Main GB location 1881: Somerset and Gloucs

English: locative name from Amesbury (Wilts), which is recorded as Ambresberie in 1086, Aumbresberia in 1231, and Amysbury in 1524. The place-name derives from Old English burh 'fortified place' (dative byrig) with an uncertain first element, probably either the Old English bird-name amer 'bunting' (genitive singular amres, **ambres*) or an Old English personal name **Ambri* (genitive **Ambres*).

Early bearers: Aylmer de Ambresbury, 1227 in Feet of Fines (Amesbury, Wilts); Henry de Aumbresbury, 1321 in Feet of Fines (Wilts); John de Ambresburi, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Figheldean, Wilts); Johannes Ambresbury, 1379 in Poll Tax (Salisbury, Wilts); John Ambresbury, canon, 1382 in Edington Cartulary (Wilts); Robert Aumesbury, citizen and carpenter, 1438 in London Wills (Saint Benet Fink, London); Willimi Amesbury, 1585, Henry Amsbury, 1630 in IGI (Westbury, Wilts); William Amesbury, 1652, Richardi Amsbury, 1715 in IGI (Wedmore, Somerset); Mariam Amesberry, 1714 in IGI (North Bradley, Wilts); Richard Amsbury, 1797 in IGI (Siston, Gloucs).

Amias

- Current frequencies: GB 24, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 6
- Main GB location 1881: Shrops

Norman, English: locative name from the French city of Amiens (Somme), which is recorded as Samarobriua Ambianorum in classical sources. Samarobriva is a Celtic place-name meaning 'the bridge over the river Somme', while the affix Ambianorum means 'of the Ambiani'. Ambiāni is an ethnic name deriving from Celtic ambi(o)- 'around', probably meaning 'those on both sides (of the Somme)' or possibly 'the people of the world'. The affix has replaced the place-name which it once qualified, and it is the ablative form Ambiānis of this ethnic name which is the source of the current place-name Amiens. For the development of the surname in England, compare 'merchants of Amias', 1326 in London Letter Books E (London).

Further information: In the 16th century the surname became confused with Ames. Thomas Amyas (1521) of Wethersfield in Essex was, no doubt, of the same family as Robert Amys, Amyse, Amyce, Ameys (1462–78 in The Essex Review 61).

Early bearers: Richard Amias, 1185 in Templars Records (Warwicks); Willard de Amiens, 1193 in Pipe Rolls (Yorks); Roger de Amias, 1276 in London Letter Books A (London); Johanne Amyas, 1296 in Subsidy Rolls (Upper Beeding, Sussex); Robert de Amyas, 1310 in Inquisitiones post Mortem (Worcs); Johne de Amyas, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Arundel, Sussex); John de Amyas, 1391, John Amyas, 1407 in Feet of Fines (Shitlington, WR Yorks); Tho. ### Amphlett

Variants: Amphlet

- Current frequencies: GB 803, Ireland 12
- GB frequency 1881: 386

- Main GB location 1881: Worcs

English: (i) relationship name perhaps from a rare Middle English female personal name Amfelot(e). Locative name: (ii) possibly from Ambleteuse (Pas-de-Calais), which is recorded as Amfleat in the 8th century, Ambletouve in 1121, Ambletue in 1208, and Ampleteu in 1305. If so, the surname must derive from the earlier form of the place-name (Amfleat), which has Germanic **fleuta-* 'stream' as the generic element, rather than the later form (Ambletouve, Ampleteu, etc.) in which Amfleat qualifies Old High German ouwa 'island, river-meadow'. However, the lack of the preposition de 'of' in the 14th-century forms of the surname argues against a locative origin.

Further information: Hanks and Hodges (at Fleet) suggest that this is a locative name derived from the Middle English preposition an 'on' fused to the place-name Fleet (from Old English fleot, Middle English flete 'estuary, stream'), with reference to Holt Fleet in Ombersley (Worcs). This seems an unlikely origin. Some pre-Conquest locative bynames were indeed formed with the preposition 'on' (see Tengvik, pp. 121–3, for examples in documents ranging from the 10th to early 12th centuries), but there is very little 14th-century evidence for this formation apart from occasional use of the prepositional phrase 'on the', such as Robertus on the Grene, 1377 in Poll Tax (Sibthorpe, Notts), and Rogerus on the Hil', 1377 in Poll Tax (Prestwold, Leics). No secure instance has been found of the survival of 'on', fused or otherwise, in an English surname. The form an rather than on would, in any case, be surprising in the dialect of Worcs in the Middle English period. When the locative surname Fleet is recorded with prepositions in the 14th century, it is either de 'of' or atte 'at, at the' which are used, e.g. Thomas de Flete, 1381 in Poll Tax (Holbeach, Lincs), and Nicholaus atte Flete, 1381 in Poll Tax (Wokefield, Berks).

Early bearers: given names: Amfelota, wife of William Maunser, 1386 in Patent Rolls (Hadleigh, Suffolk). surnames: Agnes Anfleete, 1373 in Hanks and Hodges (Ombersley, Worcs); John Amflot, 1398 in Patent Rolls (Burton upon Trent, Staffs); Anne Amflett, 1560, Willm. English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Antony, French Antoine, from Latin Antonius, the name of a gens or noble family, of unknown, perhaps Etruscan, origin. Spellings with -h-, which first appear in English in the 16th century and in French (as Anthoine) at about the same time, are due to the false belief that the name derives from Greek anthos ‘flower’.

Further information: The popularity of the personal name throughout Christendom is largely due to the cult of the Egyptian hermit Saint Anthony (AD 251–356), who in his old age gathered a community of hermits around him in the Sinai Desert and for that reason is regarded by some as the founder of Christian monasticism. It was further increased by the fame of Saint Anthony of Padua (1195–1231), who long enjoyed a great popular cult and who is believed to help people find lost things.

Unexplained. Its occurrence in 16th-century Cornwall suggests a possible relationship with the now extinct surname Antron, attested in the following examples: (heir of) Antron, 1509, (heir of) Richard Antron, 1571 in Cornish Lands (Nancetrisack, in Sithney, Cornwall); James Antron, 1670 in IGI (Mabe, Cornwall); Johanis. Antrun, 1700 in IGI (Saint Ewe, Cornwall). However, Antron is also obscure.

Further information: Derivation from Antrim (N Ireland) is extremely unlikely. Irish place-names have not usually given rise to modern surnames. Devlin is perhaps occasionally from Dublin but if so, it is untypical.

1 Norman, English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Arkill, Arketil, itself from Old Scandinavian Arnketil, Arkil, composed of the elements arn-, the inflected stem of ørn 'eagle', + ketill 'kettle, cauldron'. The 11th- and 12th-century forms in Arch- show the Anglo-Norman French convention of spelling /k/ as -ch-. Arkill is mostly recorded in the old Danelaw counties of eastern and northern England, and the surname has probably survived there in the Lincs name Ackrill, where the r has been metathesized. The prevalence of the surname Arkell in Gloucs is therefore unexpected, but a man called Archetel held land of the king in Herefordshire and Shropshire before 1066, and as the name was also used in Normandy there could have been Normans with this name in post-Conquest Gloucs. Arkayl (1327), the earliest surname form there, seems to show a rare reduction of -ketil to -keil instead of the more usual -kel.

Early bearers: given names: Arnketel, 1019 in Ramsey Cartulary (Norfolk); Archetel, Archel, Archil, 1086 in Domesday Book (Cheshire, Herefs, Leics, Shrops, Suffolk, Warwicks, Yorks); Archil de Corebr', 1159 in Pipe Rolls (Northumb).
 surnames: Robertus filius Arkell', 1218–19 in Pleas (Yorks); Richard Arkill, 1256 in Assize Rolls (Northumb); Roger Arketyl, 1279 in Hundred Rolls (Hunts); William Harkill, Arkel, 1316, 1331 in Wakefield Court Rolls (Yorks); Agnes Arkayl, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Twyning, Gloucs); John and Thomas Arkell of Twenyng, 1346 in Patent Rolls (Twyning, Gloucs); Joh'e Arkell, 1375 in Mansfield Rentals (Notts); Willelmo Harkul, 1379 in Poll Tax (Normanton Turville, Leics); Johannes Arkel, 1381 in Poll Tax (Twyning, Gloucs); John Arcle, 1455 in York Freeman's Register; Robert Arkell, 1624, John Arkell, 1738 in IGI (Gloucester, Gloucs); John Arkwell, 1729 in IGI (Miserden, Gloucs).

2 English: locative name an alternative source for the post-medieval name in Gloucs is High Ercall or Child's Ercall (Shrops), pronounced Arcall, and recorded as Arkelawe, 1200, Erkehale, 1255–6, Arkall', 1390, Arcoll, 1535, Archaule, about 1540, Archall, 1703 in Place-Names of Shrops. In spellings like Archall and Archill it is uncertain whether -ch- represents /tʃ/, as in the word archer, or /kh/, as implied in the place-name spelling Erkehale and the surname spelling Arkhill. Some of the following post-medieval bearers may otherwise belong with (1).

Early bearers: Willelmus de Arkelawe, Anora de Ercalewe, 1256 in Shrops Eyre Roll (Shrops); Simon de Ercalewe, 1306 in Subsidy Rolls (Shrewsbury, Shrops); Daniell Archoll, 1608 in IGI (Horsley, Gloucs); Mary Archill, 1611, Thomas Arkill, 1627 in IGI (Sherborne, Gloucs); Elizabeth Archill, 1646 in IGI (Bridgnorth, Shrops); John Arcle, 1687, Mary Archill, 1697, Thomas Arkhill, 1706, John Arkill, 1760 in IGI (Northleach, Gloucs); Thomas Archol, 1751, Hannah Arkil, 1754 in IGI (Ampney Saint Mary, Gloucs).

- Current frequencies: GB 606, Ireland 1
- GB frequency 1881: 316
- Main GB location 1881: Northumb and Durham; also Angus

N English: of uncertain origin. In Northumb and Durham (for example in Earsdon, Bywell, Newcastle, Gateshead), Arkley coincides with Arkle. The two names may have been confused or perhaps one is an altered form of the other.
Further information: theoretically it might be a locative name from Arclid (Cheshire), once recorded as Arkley, 1690 in Place-Names of Cheshire, I, 265. The surname is not from Arkley (Herts), which is a parish of late 19th-century creation, the name being derived from a field name in High Barnet. If it is locative in origin, it is more likely to be from an unidentified place-name in NE England or E Scotland.

Early bearers: England Isabella Arkley, 1586 in IGI (Norton, Durham); Robart Arkley, 1603, William Arklay, 1737, Thomas Arkley, 1812 in IGI (Houghton le Spring, Durham); Alice Arcklay, 1638 in IGI (Gateshead, Durham); Margret Arkley, 1664 in IGI (Newcastle upon Tyne, Northumb); Margaret Akly, 1697, daughter of Gawen Akly, 1697, Robert Arkley, son of Gawin Arkley, 1702 in IGI (Pittington, Durham); Thomas Arkley, 1713 in IGI (Earsdon, Northumb); Jane Arkley, 1818 in IGI (Bywell Saint Peter, Northumb).

Arlington

- Current frequencies: GB 76, Ireland 0
  - GB frequency 1881: 73
  - Main GB location 1881: Sussex; Middx; Lancs
- English: locative name from any of three places called Arlington (Sussex, Gloucs, Devon), or possibly Harlington in WR Yorks.
Further information: Two other places named Arlington, in Gloucs and Devon, are suggested as possible sources of the surname by Wilson (Reaney and Wilson), but in each case the place-name has undergone relatively late metathesis of Alr- to Arl-, and no evidence has been found to connect either of them with any medieval surname forms. Arlington in Bibury (Gloucs) is recorded as Ælfredincgtune in 1004, Alfrinton in 1296, Arlington in the 14th century, and Arlington in 1584, while Arlington (Devon) is recorded as Alferdintona in 1086, Alfrintone in 1258–62, Arlington in 1284, and Arlington in 1550.

Arliss

Variants: Losh

- Current frequencies: GB 138, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 117
- Main GB location 1881: Lincs

English: locative name from Newton Arlosh in Holme East Waver (Cumb), which is Arlosk in 1185, Arlossh in 1379. In Cumb a shortened form, with loss of the first syllable, developed as Losh and supplanted the full form: thus John Arlosh alias Losh, 1636 in Carlisle Wills (ed. Dench). However, the full form survived farther afield, being well recorded in the 16th century in Yorks and Lincs.

Further information: Reaney explains Arliss as a nickname from Old English ēare + lēas 'ear-less', citing Henry Earles, 1295 in Barnwell Memorandum Book (Cambs), but the evident development of Arliss from an earlier Arlish, in turn from Arlush, precludes such an explanation.

Early bearers: John de Arlosk, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Wigton, Cumb); William de Arlossche, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Newton Reigny, Cumb); Robert de Arlosshe, 1418 in Patent Rolls (Arthuret, Cumb); Elizabetha Arelush, 1550, Nicholaus Airlushe, Xpoferus Airlush, 1553, Thoms. Arlush, 1555 in IGI (Howden, ER Yorks); Richdus. ### Arlott

Variants: Arlotte, Arlett

- Current frequencies: GB 185, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 107
- Main GB location 1881: Berks and Hants

1 English: (i) nickname from Old French herlot, harlot, arlot 'rascal, scoundrel, vagrant', hence Middle English harlot, harlet, herlot 'vagabond, beggar, idle rogue'. It was used by Chaucer both as a term of derision ('ye false harlot') and also ironically for a good fellow ('he was a gentil harlot and a kynde'). In the 14th century it came to denote also an itinerant jester, buffoon, or juggler, also a male servant, attendant, or menial. The sense 'female prostitute' is not recorded before the 15th century, so Muriel Arlot and Matilda le Harlot probably bear their husbands' surnames. (ii) relationship name possibly from the Old French personal name Arlot, a pet form of Arlaud, a French version of the Continental Germanic personal name Arwald (of which the second element is **wald-* 'rule'). However, there is no certain evidence that this personal name was ever used in medieval England.

Early bearers: Alexander Arhlot, 12th cent., Ricardus Arlot, 1155–85 in Durham Liber Vitae; Geoffrey Herlot, 1193 in Pipe Rolls (Norfolk); Ralph le Harlot, 1246 in Assize Rolls (Lancs); Johannes Harlot, 1250 in Book of Fees; Adam Herlot, 1275 in Hundred Rolls; John le Harlet, 1276, Muriel Arlot, 1279 in Hundred Rolls (Cambs); Bernard Herlot, 1293 in London Letter Books A; Matilda le Harlot, 1292, Laurence Harlot, 1304 in Patent Rolls; Johannes Harlot, 1381 in Poll Tax (Iwerne Courtney, Dorset); Robert Harlott, 1586 in Parish Registers (Goudhurst, Kent); Joan Arlot, 1612 in Parish Registers (Saint Mary Bourne, Hants).

Variants: Ascott, Haskett

- Current frequencies: GB 766, Ireland 1
- GB frequency 1881: 614
- Main GB location 1881: Devon and Somerset; also Glamorgan

1 English: locative name from either of two places in Devon called Arscott. One is in the parish of Holsworthy, recorded as Essecote in 1238, Arscott in 1563. The other is in the parish of Ashwater, recorded as Ayshcote in 1330. The variation between Arscott and Ascott arose through loss of /r/ before /s/ and implies a common pronunciation /ɑ:skɒt/.

Early bearers: William de Hassecote, 1201 in Pleas (Cornwall); John de Ayshcote, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Holsworthy, Devon); Henry de Arscote, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Ashwater, Devon); Robert Aysshecote, John Arscote, 1397, William Ayshcote, 1477 in Feet of Fines (Holsworthy, Devon); Richard and William Ascott, 1524 in Subsidy Rolls (Bylston, Devon); Hercules Arscott, 1562 in IGI (Ashwater, Devon); Roseders Arscott, 1625 in IGI (Mawgan in Pydar, Cornwall); Frances Arscott, 1628 in IGI (Stogumber, Somerset); Thomas Arscott, 1768 in IGI (Wellington, Somerset); Joseph Ascott, 1773, Mary Arscott, 1804, Mary Ascott, 1823 in IGI (Halberton, Devon).

References: Place-Names of Devon, pp. 127, 147; Hey, Family Names, p. 150.

2 English: variant of Addiscott (1). The post-medieval surname is difficult to distinguish from (1) without locational or genealogical evidence, and some of the early bearers in (1) may belong here.

3 English: locative name from Arscott (Shrops), which might account for the rare family name recorded in the 1881 census in Shrops, but there is a lack of historical evidence to show continuity.

Early bearers: William de Ardescote, 1255 in Hundred Rolls (Shrops).

- Norman, English: (i) nickname from Old French arondel 'little swallow'. The earliest bearer of the name, Roger Arundel, a Domesday tenant-in-chief, has left his name in Sampford Arundel (Somerset), which he held in 1086. His byname cannot derive from the Sussex place-name but must be from the Old French word. The Norman family of which he was a principal member held lands in Somerset, Yorks, and elsewhere. They later introduced a de into their name, falsely suggesting a place-name origin. In northern England, folk etymology further led to variant spellings in -dale. (ii) locative name from Arundel, Sussex (recorded as Harundel in Domesday Book, as Arundell in 1087, and as Arndle in 1788). The traditional local pronunciation is Arndell. The place-name is derived from Old English hār hūne 'horehound' + dell 'valley'; the river name Arun is a back-formation. The history of this problematic name is further complicated by the fact that the place-name Arundel early lost its initial H, while the nickname in (i) equally early acquired an inorganic initial H.

Further information: Redmonds, Surnames and Genealogy, p. 209, notes confusion with the surname Addinall, citing William Arundel alias Addinal, 1744 (York). Early bearers: Rogerius Arundel, Harundel, 1086 in Domesday Book (Dorset, Somerset); Robert Arundel, 1130 in Pipe Rolls (Dorset); Roger de Arundelle, 1148 in Eynsham Cartulary (Oxon); Osbert Arundel, Harundel, 1154 in Rievaulx Cartulary (Yorks); Roger Arundel, 1159 in Pipe Rolls (Somerset); Thomas Arundel (de Arundel), 1178 in Pipe Rolls (Yorks); John de Arundel, about 1198 in History of Saint Barts Hospital (London); Roger Arundel (de Arundel), 1204 in Assize Rolls (Yorks); Nicholas (de) Arundel, 1225, Roger de Arundel, 1268 in Assize Rolls (Somerset); Robert Arundel, Robert de Arundell, 1327, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Sussex); Johannes de Arundell, 1379 in Poll Tax (Campsall, WR Yorks); Adam de Arundel, 1381 in Poll Tax (Sambrook, Shrops); Walter Arundle, 1576 in IGI (Bodmin, Cornwall); Richard Arrandell, Arrendale, 1631, 1638 in Parish Registers (Rothwell, WR Yorks); Sarah Arundle, 1785 in IGI (Doncaster, WR Yorks). References: Place-Names of Sussex, pp. 136–7.

  - Main GB location 1881: Middx
- 1 German: (i) locative name from any of numerous places named Aschau or Ascha(ch), or topographic for a 'dweller by the ash tree', from an agent derivative of Middle High German asch 'ash tree'.

(ii) occupational name from Äscher, a term denoting an ash burner, someone who prepared ash from wood fires for use in glassworks and soapworks, from Middle High German escher, an agent derivative of Middle High German asche, esche 'ashes'. Compare the English surname Ashburner.

Early bearers: Henrick Ascher, sugar baker, born in Prussia, in Census 1861 (Saint George in the East, Middx); Hermann Ascher, born in Germany, in Census 1881 (Middx).

References: Brechenmacher.

2 Jewish (Ashkenazic): handout name or ornamental adoption of the German family name. Further information: In Middle English, this was found as a surname, a variant of Asser. However, there are only six bearers in the 1881 Census, all of whom are of German or Jewish ancestry, so it seems likely that the name died out in England and then was reintroduced from the Continent.

Early bearers: Benjamin Ascher, born in Germany, in Census 1861 (Whitechapel, Middx); Moses Ascher, born in London, in Census 1881 (Middx); Eli Ascher, dried fruit merchant, born in Turkey, in Census 1901 (Wandsworth, Surrey).

- Main GB location 1881: WR Yorks

1 English: see Astbury. Redmonds notes that there is no evidence for the survival of the Middle English surname Asshebury or Ashebury in 15th-century Sheffield or nearby places, and since the post-medieval name there shares its spellings with variants of Astbury, this is the more likely source.

Further information: The location of the medieval WR Yorks surname is in the Dearne valley, close to Sheffield. Its origin is uncertain. The Devon, Berks, and Worcs places proposed for Ashbury are not obvious sources; nor is Wilson's suggestion of Ashberry Hill in Old Byland (NR Yorks), which was not the name of a settlement and is unlikely to have given rise to a surname.

References: Place-Names of NR Yorks, p. 197; Redmonds, Dictionary of Yorks Surnames.

Early bearers: Thomas de Asseberi, 1312 in Monk Bretton Cartularies (Hickleton, WR Yorks); Thomas de Asshebury, 1349 in Feet of Fines (Adwick upon Dearne and Swinton, WR Yorks); Robertus Ashebury, 1379 in Poll Tax (Barnburgh, WR Yorks); Elizabeth Ashburie, 1566, Elizabetha Asbury, 1607, Nath. 1 Norman, English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Askell, Old Scandinavian Áskell, a shortened form of Ásketill (see Ashkettle and Axtell). The personal name was also popular among the Normans, sometimes in the form Anskell (with Continental Germanic Ans- substituted for As-), which largely explains why the name occurs in post-Conquest England in counties not settled by Vikings. Its appearance as a surname is often disguised by altered pronunciations. Metathesis of /sk/ to /ks/, spelled -x-, has given rise to Axcell and Axtell, while the addition of a prosthetic H- has produced Haskell and Haxell. The Normans frequently used the name in Frankish forms; see Anketell, Askin, Haskin, Antin, Hastie, Astin, and Astill. For the name in the Isle of Man see Castell.

Further information: Norman forms of the personal name were freely interchangeable. In the Whitby Chartulary, Aschetillus de Houkesgard (about 1155) is also called Aschetinus (about 1145), Astillus (about 1170), and Astinus (12th century). In Danelaw Documents (Leics), in the late 12th century, Anketinus persona de Prestwalda appears also as Asketinus filius Hugonis de Prestewalda and as Anketillus de Prestwalda. Compare also Aschetillus, Ancatillus, Anquetillus Malore (i), 1154–89 in Danelaw Documents (Leics).

1 English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Ad(e)stan, which is usually from Old English Æðelstān (see Alston). Robertus filius Adestani and Walterus filius Alstan, 1206 in Curia Regis Rolls (Suffolk), both mentioned in the same document relating to the same parish, were probably both sons of Æðelstan. It may, however, be from the much rarer Old English name Ēadstān (from ēad 'prosperity' + stān 'stone'). The forms found in Domesday Book, Æstanus and Estan, may represent either of the Old English names.

Early bearers: given names: Asthone de Sancto Luca, about 1140 in Danelaw Documents (Lincs); Astanus de Hune, 1190 in Pipe Rolls (Yorks); Adelstanus, 1195 in Pipe Rolls (Kent).

surnames: Tomas filius Adestan, 1187 in Pipe Rolls (Yorks); Hugo filius Athelstan, Adelstan', 1218, 1219 in Assize Rolls (Lincs); Lewin Adstan, 1221 in Cotton Tiberius B ii (Norfolk); Herbertus filius Edelstani, 1240 in Ramsey Cartulary (Norfolk); Thomas Astan, 1276 in Hundred Rolls (Lincs); Agnes Aston, 1540 in IGI (Burton upon Trent, Staffs); Anne Aston, 1546 in IGI (Rotherham, WR Yorks); Johannis Aston, 1546 in IGI (Bromyard, Herefs); Roger Aston, 1546 in IGI (Bishops Tachbrook, Warwicks); Thomas Aston, 1550 in IGI (Chislet, Kent).

2 English: locative name from any of the numerous places in England named Aston, probably chiefly the one in Warwicks. See also Ashton.

Early bearers: Richard de Aston', 1206 in Curia Regis Rolls (Gloucs); Roger de Aston, 1355 in Patent Rolls (Staffs); William de Aston', 1359 in Feet of Fines (Shrops); Nicholas Aston', 1376 in Feet of Fines (Herts); Robert Aston, 1379 in Patent Rolls (Gloucs); Hugh de Aston', 1384 in Feet of Fines (Herefs).

Astridge

- Current frequencies: GB 180, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 159
- Main GB location 1881: Hants and IoW

English: of uncertain origin; perhaps a variant of Ostridge, which may be related to Old French ostricier 'keeper of goshawks' (from ostur '(gos) hawk'). The goshawk word has cognates in other Romance languages with a-, e.g. Spanish azor. Further information: The early spellings tell against derivation from minor places called Eastridge in Sussex and Wilts.

Early bearers: William Actrich, about 1257, William Attrich, Walter Haystrich, Walter Attrich, 1276, Geoffrey Astrich, 1280, Walter Aztrich, 1299, William Astrich, William Aztrich, 1300, Adam Astrych', 1330 in New Forest Documents (New Forest, Hants); Richard Atrich, 1280 in New Forest Documents (Ellingham, Hants); Johis Astridge, 1690 in IGI (Kingsclere, Hants).

1 Chinese: Mandarin form of the Chinese surname 敖 (Ao in Mandarin pinyin, Ngo in Cantonese romanization), meaning both 'rambling' and 'deposed king without posthumous titles' in ancient Chinese: (i) from the personal name of Tai Ao (太敖), teacher of the legendary king Zhuan Xu (traditional dates: 2514–2437 BC). (ii) it is said that the surname is also borne by descendants of deposed kings of the former state of Chu, with no posthumous titles, during the Spring and Autumn period (770–476 BC).

2 Chinese: Cantonese form of the Chinese surname 歐 (Ou in Mandarin pinyin), meaning 'to sing someone's praise' in ancient Chinese: (i) from the place-name Dong Ou (東甌), a fief (in present-day Wenzhou in Zhejiang province) which was granted to Yao in 192 BC. It is said that Yao was a descendant of Wujiang (reigned 355–333 BC), king of the state of Yue (located mainly in present-day Zhejiang and Jiangxi province) during the Spring and Autumn period (770–476 BC). (ii) from the place-name Ou Yu (歐餘), name of a fief (located in present-day Zhejiang province) that was granted to Ti, the second son of Wujiang (reigned 355–333 BC), king of the state of Yue (located mainly in present-day Zhejiang and Jiangxi province) during the Spring and Autumn period (770–476 BC).

3 Chinese: Cantonese form of the Chinese surname 區 (Ou in Mandarin pinyin), originally denoting an ancient vessel for measurement in ancient Chinese: from the personal name of Ou Zhizi (歐冶子), an expert sword-maker who lived during the Spring and Autumn period (770–476 BC). Some of his

  - GB frequency 1881: 330
  - Main GB location 1881: WR Yorks
- English: locative name from an unidentified place, presumably in WR Yorks.
Further information: Derivation from Aldersley in Bradford is linguistically possible but in the Middle ages this minor place-name is attested only in the field name Aldeleysike in 1292, and there is no evidence that it gave rise to a surname. Identification with East and West Ardsley (WR Yorks), though close to Dewsbury, where the surname has most of its early history, is phonological improbable.
Early bearers: John de Audesley, 1373 in Yorks Title Deeds (Sandal, WR Yorks); John Audesley, 1494 in Yorks Deeds (Ossett, WR Yorks); John Awdisley, 1545 in Thoresby Society 11 (Ossett, WR Yorks); Thomas Audsley, 1621 in IGI (Dewsbury, WR Yorks); Thomas Audsley, 1642 in Protestation Returns (Ossett, WR Yorks); Elin Audsley, 1666 in IGI (Sandal Magna, WR Yorks).

  - GB frequency 1881: 7
- Relationship name from the personal name Augustin (Latin Augustinus), a derivative of the Latin word

Augustus

augustus 'consecrated; majestic'; compare Augustus. Although the given name, usually in its Latin form, was quite common in the medieval period, mainly because of the veneration of Saint Augustine of Hippo and perhaps also of Canterbury, the vernacular form Austin was even more frequent in England. Since the 1950s the frequency of this surname in Britain has increased due to immigration.

Early bearers: Nicholas Augustin, 1275 in Subsidy Rolls (Worcs); Roberto Augstyn, 1379 in Poll Tax (Wyboston, Beds); Johanne Augustyn', 1379 in Poll Tax (Gilmorton, Leics); William Augustine, 1630 in IGI (Linwood, Lincs).

Auker

Variants: Alger

- Current frequencies: GB 176, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 81
- Main GB location 1881: Norfolk

English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Alker, Auker, from either Old English Ealþhere with Anglo-Norman French vocalization of /l/ before the consonant, or from Old French Alcher, Aucher, Auqu(i)er Continental Germanic Alchari, both deriving from elements meaning 'temple' and 'army'. The 12th-century spelling -ch- is an Anglo-Norman French representation of /k/.

Further information: The rare surname Alcher (2 bearers in the 1881 census) is perhaps a another version of the French name but with -ch- representing the Central French pronunciation /tʃ/ as in chair.

Compare Auchere filius Henrici, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Cambs); John Aucher, 1428 in Feudal Aids (Wilts).

Early bearers: given names: Alcherus Venator, 1166 in Pipe Rolls (Essex).

- Current frequencies: GB 74, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 77
- Main GB location 1881: Wilts

1 Norman, English: locative name from Audrieu (Calvados), recorded as Aldreium in 1108 (Dauzat and Rostaing). The first known bearer of this name in England, William de Aldrie, was executed for treason in 1095, and there appears to be no other medieval evidence for the surname in Wilts, where William’s lands were. Nevertheless the post-medieval evidence for Awdry in Wilts and for Audrey in adjacent counties has been tentatively assigned to this etymology, partly because the same surname (and perhaps the same family as William) occurs continuously elsewhere (in Durham from the 12th to the 14th centuries), and partly because a Robert Audrey is recorded in Oxon in 1279. Alternatively, the Wilts, Berks, Oxon, and Gloucs surnames derive from the relationship name identified in (2). Odry is an occasional post-medieval variant, which as Oderly survived sporadically in England until the 1881 census but has now become extinct.

Early bearers: N England Rogerus Audrei, 12th cent., Rogerius de Audereia, 1170–1200, Walterus de Audre, 1215–45, Walterius Daudri, 13th cent., Thomas Daudi, 1370–1400 in Durham Liber Vitae. 2 English: relationship name from the Middle English female personal name Aldrith, which sometimes became Audrey by a 15th-century pronunciation change of /ald/ to /aud/. It derives from one of three Old English female personal names, Æðelþrȳð, Ælfþrȳð, and Ealhþrȳð. The first element in these is æðel ‘noble’, ælf ‘elf, sprite’, or ealh ‘shrine, temple’, and the second element is þrȳð ‘strength, force’. The most popular was Æðelþrȳð, commonly latinized as Etheldreda and appearing in various Middle English forms such as Aldrith(e), Aldrith, Aldreth, Etheldred, and Eldrid(e). It was borne by Saint Etheldred (later known also as Saint Audrey), queen of Northumbria, daughter of Anna, king of East Anglia. She was the founder and first abbess of the monastery at Ely in about 672, and her continuing cult after the Norman Conquest was probably responsible for the survival of the personal name well into the 14th century, especially in E Anglia. Common Middle English forms like Aldreth and Eldrid probably contributed to Aldred, whose main location is E Anglia, Eldred, which is common in E England, and possibly Eldrett. It may be the source of Audrey and Awdry in SW England, see (1). Early bearers: given names: Aldreda, 1086 in Domesday Book (Norfolk); Adeldreda, 1202 in Feet of Fines (Norfolk), identical with Aildreda, 1206 in Curia Regis Rolls; Aldreda, 1219 in Assize Rolls (Yorks); Etheldreda wife of Hugo de Rokelund, 1290 in Norwich Deeds; Etheldreda, 1304 in Ancient Deeds (Essex); Eldrede Freman, 1310 in Gaol Delivery Rolls (Norfolk); Etheldr’ Goldwyn, 1381 in Suffolk Poll Tax. surnames, E Anglia: Johannes Aldrith, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Norfolk); Jhon Audry, 1546 in IGI (Norwich, Norfolk); William Awdrye, 1560 in IGI (South Weald, Essex); Anne Awdry, 1563 in IGI (Fowlmere, Cambs); Thomas Audrye, 1574 in IGI (Lowestoft, Suffolk); Andrew Awdry, 1559 in IGI (Great Yarmouth, Norfolk).

3 Huguenot: relationship name French Auduroy ‘(son) of (someone surnamed) Duroy or Durey’, which itself signified ‘(son) of (someone nicknamed) the king’ (Old French le roi or le rei). Auduroy, perhaps through its variant Audurey, may have become shortened to Audry and confused with a different surname, French Audri, from the Old French male personal name Audri, Continental Germanic Aldric. Early bearers: Ester Auduroy, daughter of Jean and Ester Auduroy, 1689 in IGI (Threadneedle Street, London); Renee Audry, daughter of Jean and Marie Audry, 1701 in IGI (Threadneedle Street); Pierre Audry, son of Michel and Marie Audry, 1729 in IGI (Saint Jean French Huguenot Church, Spitalfields, Middx).

- GB frequency 1881: 732
- Main GB location 1881: SW England: esp. Wilts; also Surrey

English: locative name from either of two places called Axford (Wilts, Hants).

Further information: Axford in Nutley (Hants), which is recorded as Ashore in 1272, Axore in 1280 (and throughout the medieval period), Axor in 1708, and Axford in 1757, is an unlikely source of the surname. The second element of the place-name is Old English ōra 'slope', remodelled to ford as late as the 18th century, and the first element may be the same as in the Wilts place-name.

Early bearers: Ad Axforthe, 1379 in Poll Tax (Potterne, Wilts); Johnis Axford, 1547 in IGI (Botusfleming, Cornwall); Agnes Axford, 1587 in IGI (Bratton, Wilts).

- GB frequency 1881: 745
- Main GB location 1881: Lancs and Cheshire

1 English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name **Acke* + son. This personal name was a pet form of Adam rather than a survival of Old English Acca, which had probably gone out of use by the mid-13th century, i.e. before surnames in -son became hereditary in N England. Acke is a short form of pet names of Adam such as Adkin (see Atkin) and Adcock with assimilation of the -d-. Compare Nack, Akin, and Acock. There may have been occasional confusion with Haskayne.

Early bearers: Johannes Akeson', 1379 in Poll Tax (Malham, WR Yorks); Thomas Acson, 1561 in Bardsley (Cheshire); Johanna Acson, 1607, Ellenora Axon, 1635 in IGI (Great Budworth, Cheshire); James Axon, 1620, Francis Axon, 1747 in IGI (Stockport, Cheshire).

Early bearers: Willelmus Agetson', 1377 in Poll Tax (Burneston, NR Yorks); Simon Agasson', 1379 in Poll Tax (Clint, WR Yorks); Simon Aggeson, 1379 in Poll Tax (Warwicks); Willelmo Agasson', 1381 in Poll Tax (Bottesford, Leics); Robt. Variants: Axcell, Haxell, Haskell, Axten, Axell, Ashkettle

- Current frequencies: GB 514, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 355
- Main GB location 1881: S Midlands: esp. Bucks

1 English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Asketill, Old Scandinavian Ásketil. Through loss of the unstressed medial vowel it developed to **Askitill*, and by metathesis of /sk/ to /ks/ it became Ax(s)til, Axtell, Axcell, etc. The personal name was first introduced to England by Viking settlers in E Anglia, the N Midlands, and N England, but it was also much used by the Normans, which explains its occurrence as a surname in S England. See also Ashkettle, and compare Askell and Anketell, which are from different versions of the same personal name.

Early bearers: S England Willelmo Axtil, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Corscombe, Dorset); Benedicto Axtil, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Bradford Abbas, Dorset); William Axtil, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Churchstanton, Devon); Willm. Axtell, 1588 in IGI (Horsham, Sussex); Sarah Axtell, 1599 in IGI (Sandwich, Kent); Elizabeth Axtell, 1683, John Axtell, 1686 in Bardsley (Canterbury, Kent); Daniel Axtell, 1776 in IGI (Chatham, Kent).

2 English: nickname for a salt merchant, from Middle English Hakkesalt, composed of hakken 'to hack, chop (something) into pieces' + salt 'salt'. Compare Salter. The medieval nickname is well evidenced but the 1314 and 1323 Great Berkhamstead surname forms are slightly irregular. Hecke- for Hacke- is unexpected, while the preposition de implies a locative name but none has been identified, so the preposition may be a scribal error. Whatever the etymology of this surname, it is the source of the Great Berkhamstead farm name Haxters End, recorded as Haksaltsend, 1565 in Place-Names of Herts. William and Roger are therefore potential ancestors of the post-medieval Great Berkhamstead family and perhaps of other families in Herts and neighbouring Bucks with surnames spelled Axal, Axcell, Axell, Axhall, Axoll, Haxall, and Axtell. The loss of initial H- and final -t would not be unusual developments, nor is the insertion of medial -t- to give Axtell, now the main version. However, it is impossible to distinguish these post-medieval names from identical ones with different etymologies, and some or all the of the S Midlands names may in fact derive from (1) above. See also Haxell.

Further information: Reaney and Wilson assigns the medieval Berkhamstead forms to Hackshall or Hackshaw, but the 1881 distribution of the surnames tells against this.

Early bearers: S Midlands Gervasius Hakesalt, 1176 in Pipe Rolls; Walter Hakesalt, 1212 in Pipe Rolls (Hants); Robert Hakesalt of Winchester, 1280 in New Forest Documents (Hants); Roger Hakesalt, 1297 in Earldom of Cornwall Accounts; William Heckesalt, 1314, Roger de [sic] Hakkesalt, 1323 in Place-Names of Herts (Great Berkhamsted); Edward Hacsalt, 1387 in Assize Rolls (Lincs); John Axtell, 1539, Isaak Axtell, 1614 in IGI (Chesham, Bucks); John Axtell, 1614, William Axell, 1716 in IGI (Berkhamsted); Elizabeth Axoll, 1566 in IGI (North Mimms); Ralfe Axcell, 1571 in IGI (Digswell); Dorothe Axal, 1575, William Axtell, 1586 in IGI (Saint Albans); Sara Axtell, 1582, Sarah Axtell, 1686 in IGI (Hemel Hempstead); Joseph Axhall, 1754, Frances Haxall, 1794 in IGI (Cheshunt, Herts).

Old Danish, Old Swedish Elaf gave rise to Ayloff, but the names were probably confused with each other.

Early bearers: given names: Eilaf, Ailof, Elaf, 1086 in Domesday Book; Ailef de Palestun, 1175 in Pipe Rolls (Northumb).

surnames: Willelmus filius Eilaf, 1191 in Pipe Rolls (Northants); Robertus filius Egelof, 1196 in Pipe Rolls (Lincs); Egelaf, 12th cent. in Douglas Book (Suffolk); Ricardus filius Ailof, 1203 in Curia Regis Rolls (Northants); Nicholas Eiluf, Ailof, 1221 in Assize Rolls (Warwicks); Julian' Aylif, 1279 in Hundred Rolls (Oxon); Willelmo Elof, 1289 in Carisbrooke Cartulary (Arreton, IoW); Geoffrey Ayllef, John Aylofh, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Suffolk); Roger Eyllefe, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Semington, Wilts); John Aillofe, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Winterslow, Wilts); Walterus Eylof', 1379 in

Poll Tax (Mildenhall, Wilts); George Ayliffe, 1621 in IGI (Bucklebury, Berks); Walter Ayliffe, 1630 in IGI (Holborn, Middx); John Ayliffe, 1632 in IGI (Foxley, Wilts); Francis Ayliffe, 1639 in IGI (Albury, Herts); Henry Ayliffe, 1639 in IGI (Romsey, Hants).

Ayloff can only be included here by assuming influence from the Scandinavian name. Compare Richard Ayllyau, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Warwicks).

Azzopardi

---

- Current frequencies: GB 553, Ireland 6
- GB frequency 1881: 1

southern Italian, Maltese: ethnic name, occupational name from the medieval Greek word atsoupas 'Mauritanian, Moor, Black person' (plural atsoupadēs), which also came to mean 'mercenary soldier'. The medieval Greek word probably derives ultimately from Old Persian takhma spada 'army', modern Persian sipah. The modern form seems to have been influenced by Italian (gatto)pardo 'serval' (a species of wild cat), which features on the arms of the Sicilian princely di Lampedusa family.

Further information: There is no evidence to support the belief that the name is of Sephardic Jewish origin or that it means 'Sephardic'.

Ba

- Current frequencies: GB 72, Ireland 4
- GB frequency 1881: 9

- 1 African: unexplained. Compare Bah.
- 2 Arabic: from a shortened form of Abā, accusative case of abu ‘father’.
- 3 Chinese: Mandarin or Cantonese form of the Chinese surname 巴: (i) said to be borne by descendants of Fu Xi, a legendary king who lived prior to the Xia dynasty (i. e. before 2070 BC). (ii) from Ba (巴), the name of an ancient state (located in Sichuan province and the city of Chongqing), which was annihilated during the Spring and Autumn period (770–476 BC).
- 4 Vietnamese: unexplained.

Babb

Variants: Babbs

- Current frequencies: GB 1139, Ireland 53
- GB frequency 1881: 811
- Main GB location 1881: Devon, Somerset, and Cornwall; also Staffs

1 English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Babb(e), usually no doubt a pet form of the female name Barbara (see Barbary) but possibly in some cases a survival of the Old English personal name Babba. Some of the following early bearers may alternatively belong under (2).

Further information: Middle English pet forms of Barbara probably include Babb and Babbitt, as well as Babel and Babelot, as evidenced by Margery Babel and Nicholas Babelot, 1279 in Hundred Rolls (Cams).

Early bearers: Alwinus Babbe, 1198 in Feet of Fines (Suffolk); Richard Babbe, 1230 in Pipe Rolls (Devon); Richard Babbe, 1301–2 in Winchester Pipe Roll (Hants); Joh’s Babbe, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Canterbury, Kent); Edmundus Babbe, 1377 in Poll Tax (Teigngrace, Devon); Ricardo Babbe, 1379 in Poll Tax (Corfe, Somerset); Agnis Babb, 1576 in IGI (North Petherton, Somerset); Gyles Bab, 1611 in IGI (Bideford, Devon); Benjamin Bab, 1622 in IGI (Sarratt, Herts); James Babb, 1749 in IGI (Falmouth, Cornwall); George Babb, 1752 in IGI (Lincoln, Lincs); Patience Babb, 1781 in IGI (Wednesbury, Staffs).

Babbage

Variants: Babbidge

- Current frequencies: GB 547, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 471
- Main GB location 1881: Devon

English: nickname perhaps for someone given to mockery or fooling people, or alternatively for someone who stammered or spoke indistinctly. The source looks like an unrecorded Anglo-Norman French **baubich*, **babich*, **bobich*, Middle English **ba(u)bi(s)ch*, **bobi(s)ch*, with two possible senses. It could be related to Middle English babishen ‘to mock, scoff at’, from the same root as Old French baubir, bober ‘to mock, deride, make a joke (of)’, and Anglo-Norman French baubeur ‘false, insincere person’. Compare Middle English bobben ‘to deride, make a fool of’. Alternatively the surname might be related to Anglo-Norman French balbuisir (Latin balbutire) ‘to stammer, speak indistinctly’, with the same root as Old French bauber, Anglo-Norman French barer ‘to stammer’, and Anglo-Norman French baube ‘stammering’ (Latin balbus) and baubeur ‘stammerer’.

Further information: Place-Names of Devon, p. 374, associates Henry Bobich’ (1332) with the place called Babbages in Winkleigh. The post-medieval unrounding of o to a is a common feature of Devon dialect. The 16th-century -aw- spelling seems to reflect an alternative Middle English form **Baubi(s)ch*.

Early bearers: Henry Bobich’, Sarra Bobych’, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Winkleigh, Devon); Johannes Bebisich’ [for Bobisch’], 1377 in Poll Tax (Chawleigh, Devon); Johan Bawbych, 1546, Edmond Babbage, 1579, in IGI (Devon); Adam Babage, 1570 in IGI (Clyst Hydon, Devon); Thomsan Babbidge, 1579 in IGI (Exeter, Devon); Bennett Bobbidge, 1610 in IGI (Uplowman, Devon); Samuell Bawbidge, 1618 in IGI (Abbotskerswell, Devon); George Babedge, 1628 in

PROB 11 (Cullompton, Devon); Rogeri Babbage, 1637 in IGI (Winkleigh, Devon); Elizabeth Babidge, 1727 in IGI (Hatherleigh, Devon); Michael Babbidge, 1751 in IGI (Portsmouth, Hants); John Babbidge, 1832 in IGI (Northwood, IoW).

Babcock

- Current frequencies: GB 87, Ireland 3
- GB frequency 1881: 27
- Main GB location 1881: Lincs; Middx

English: apparently a post-medieval form of Badcock. There is no reason why a Middle English **Babbecock*, a pet form of Babb (Barbara), should not have existed, but evidence has yet to be found.

Early bearers: Edward Badcock, 1559, Mary Babcock, 1613 in IGI (Bassingbourn, Cambs); John Badcock, 1596, Mary Babcock, 1713 in IGI (Paul, Cornwall);

  - GB frequency 1881: 91
  - Main GB location 1881: Hants
- 1 English: (i) relationship name perhaps from a Middle English pet form of the female personal name Barbara. Compare Babb (1), of which Baby (1332) may either be a variant + the hypocoristic suffix -y or a Devon dialect form of final -e. Compare Thomas Babbe senior, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Colyton, Devon). (ii) nickname from Middle English babbe, babi ‘young child, infant’. Compare Babb (2).
- Early bearers: Walter Baby, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Colyton, Devon); Henricus Baby, 1377 in Poll Tax (Dalditch, Devon); Henricus Baby, 1379 in Poll Tax (Morston, Norfolk); Elizabeth Babey, 1664 in IGI (Southwark, Surrey); Henry Babey, 1739 in IGI (Horsham, Sussex); Edmund Babey, 1786 in IGI (Eling, Hants).
- 2 Norman: locative name perhaps from Baby (Seine et Marne) but there is no evidence that this gave rise to an Anglo-Norman surname.

Babington

- Variants: Babbington, Bavington, Bebbington, Bevington
- Current frequencies: GB 430, Ireland 85
  - GB frequency 1881: 295
  - Main GB location 1881: Surrey; Lincs; Warwicks; Cheshire; also Ayr
  - Main Irish location 1847–64: Derry
- English, also Scottish: (i) locative name from Babington (Somerset) or possibly Bavington (Northumb), which is recorded as Babington until the early 18th century; see Watts, Dictionary. The alteration to Bavington and Bevington shows a common development of -b- to -v- in place-names and surnames. (ii) locative name from Bebbington (Cheshire), see Bebington. (iii) locative name from Bevington (Warwicks), see Bevington.
- Further information: The derivation in Reaney and Wilson from Babbington in Kimberley (Notts) is implausible, since it is a minor place-name derived from the surname.
- Early bearers: Eva de Babington, 1201 in Assize Rolls (Somerset); Hugo de Babington, 1270 in Assize Rolls (Evertton, Notts); Henricus de Babbyngton, 1379 in Poll Tax (Anston, WR Yorks); John Babyngton, knight, 1484–5 in Nottingham Borough Records (Notts); Margaret Babington, 1556 in IGI (Metheringham, Lincs); Beatrisse Bavington, 1561 in IGI (East Barkwith, Lincs); Anne Bevington, 1660 in IGI (Welton le Wold, Lincs); Easter Bavington, 1667 in

- 1 Chinese: Mandarin form of the Chinese surnames 白 and 柏, see Pak (1) and (2).
2 Korean: (i) (배, Pae; Chinese character: 裴) said to be borne by descendants of Chi T'a (祗沓), one of the legendary six elders who established Pak Hyökköse as the Shilla kingdom's first king. In AD 56, in recognition of his support, the Shilla king Yuri Isagūm (AD 24–57) bestowed upon Chi T'a the surname 裴 (Bai). However, nothing more is known about his descendants. (ii) The person normally cited as the founding ancestor of Bai families in Korea was originally named Paek Ok (白玉). The Koryō king T'ae Cho (太祖) Wan Kōn (王建) renamed him Bai Hyūn-kyōng (裒玄慶) in honour of his meritorious service in the founding of the Koryō Kingdom in AD 918.

Bail

• Main GB location 1881: Orkney; Caithness
Scottish: locative name probably from Beaquoy in Birsay (Orkney), according to Clouston, who says '[t]here was certainly a family of Beaquoy of Beaquoy, and the odal lands of the Baikies, afterwards of Tankerness, certainly lay in the near neighbourhood.' Black suggests, however, that it may originally be from the old manor of Baikie in Angus (Beaqui, in 1565), and transferred to Orkney. Marwick records the Orkney place-name as Beaqui in 1492, Beaquoy in 1500.
Early bearers: John Baikie, 1643 in Acts of Parliaments of Scotland (Kirkwall, Orkney); Rot. Baiely, 1668 in IGI (South Ronaldsay, Orkney); Thomas Backie, 1697 in New Spalding Miscellany (Kirkwall, Orkney); Geo Baiely, 1708 in IGI (Canisbay, Caithness).

1 English: occupational name from Middle English bailli 'manager, administrator' (Old French bailli(s), baillif and thus identical in origin with Bayliff). This has become the most common form of the surname, having fallen together with other origins (see 2 and 3 below), but as a vocabulary word it has dropped out of use. Compare Scottish Baillie.
Early bearers: Roger le bayly, 1230 in Pipe Rolls (Suffolk); John Baly, 1274 in Wakefield Court Rolls (WR Yorks); Thomas Bailie, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Suffolk); Thomas le Baly, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Sussex); Ricardus Bailly, 1377 in Poll Tax (Weare Giffard, Devon); Thomas Bailly, 1377 in Poll Tax (Great Oakley, Essex); Thomas Baili, 1377 in Poll Tax (Bushby, Leics); Thomas Bailli, 1379 in Poll Tax (Dodford, Northants); Rogero Bailly, 1379 in Poll Tax (Allensmore, Herefs); Johanne Balie, 1379 in Poll Tax (Westm); Johannes Baillie, 1379 in Poll Tax (Settle, WR Yorks); Thoma Baili, 1381 in Poll Tax (Aston Blank, Gloucs); Simone le Bailly, 1381 in Poll Tax (Great Barr, Staffs); William Bailye, 1559 in IGI (Caddington, Beds); Petronel Bailey, 1561 in IGI (Stanford Rivers, Essex); Marcy Bailey, 1562 in IGI (Saint Andrew by the Wardrobe, London); William Bailey, 1563 in IGI (Ashbourne, Derbys); George Baylee, 1563 in IGI (Barnstaple, Devon); John Bailey, 1569 in IGI (Birmingham, Warwicks); William Bailey, 1588 in IGI (Little Plumstead, Norfolk); Ann Bailly, 1620 in IGI (Shenington, Oxon); William Bailley, 1627 in IGI (Westbourne, Sussex).
2 English: locative name from Bailey in Little Mitton (Lancs).
Early bearers: Elias de Bailee, 1204 in Feet of Fines (Lancs); Ralph de Baylegh, 1246 in Assize Rolls (Lancs); Jordan de Bailegh, 1257 in Lancs Inquests (Lancs); Johannes de Baylay, 1379 in Poll Tax (Appletreewick, WR Yorks); Ricardo de Bayley, 1379 in Poll Tax (Ribby with Wrea, Lancs); Willelmus Baylay, 1379 in Poll Tax (Pontefract, WR Yorks); John Bailey, 1526 in York Registry Wills (Great Mitton, WR Yorks); Ralph Bailey, 1602 in IGI (Bispham with Norbreck, Lancs); Martha Baylay, 1614 in IGI (Almondbury, WR Yorks).
References: Redmonds, Dictionary of Yorks Surnames; Lancs Place-Names, p. 141.
Early bearers: John ate Baylie, 1317 in Assize Rolls (Kent).

Bailhache

• Current frequencies: GB 28, Ireland 0
• GB frequency 1881: 52
• Main GB location 1881: Jersey
Norman, French: (i) nickname apparently from Old French and Norman French (including Channel Islands) baille hache 'give axe', perhaps used as an occupational nickname for a woodman or an executioner. Compare Balhatchet. But continental French records almost invariably include the preposition de, suggesting a place-name origin. (ii) also later continental French, witness the 1701 'Draft of an Act for naturalizing . . . John Bailehache . . .' (possibly the Southampton merchant of that name).
Further information: Payne's Armorial of Jersey, p. 34, says that it is on record in Jersey since the Extente de Jersey of 1331. 'The Norman stem is traced from Raoul de Bailehache, living near Caen in 1305, where the name is and has been variously spelt, Ballehache, de Bellehache, de Bailhache, de Baillhache, de Balliehache, and de Bailehache.'
surnames: John Bailehache, 1418 in Deputy Keeper's Report, p. 41; John Bailehache of that Isle of Jersey, marchand, 1615 in Privy Council 34, p. 96; Nicholas Bailehache, 1666 in Ordres du Conseil.

Bal

- Current frequencies: GB 890, Ireland 2
- GB frequency 1881: 5

1 French: relationship name from a short form of one of a number of personal names of Continental Germanic origin formed with **bald* 'bold, brave' as the first element.

Early bearers: Francois Bal, wine merchant born in France, in Census 1881 (Westminster, Middx); Clothilde Bal, born in France, in Census 1901 (London); Alphonse Bal, born in France, in Census 1901 (London); Gabrielle Bal, born in France, in Census 1911 (NR Yorks).

2 Indian (Panjab): Sikh, based on the name of a Jat tribe, from Sanskrit bala 'strength'.

3 Polish: relationship name from a reduced form of the personal name Baltazar, the Polish form of Balthasar, the traditional name of one of the Three Wise Men of Christian tradition, related to that of the Old Testament royal name Belshazzar, from Akkadian Bēl-šarra-ušur '[may the god] Bel/Baal protect the king'.

Bala

Variants: Balu

- Current frequencies: GB 507, Ireland 7
- GB frequency 1881: 4

1 Iranian, Indian (Gujarat and Mumbai): probably from Persian bālā 'high, exalted'.

2 Indian (southern): Hindu, based on Sanskrit bāla 'child'.

Further information: In India this is a given name, but it has come to be used as a family name among people from South India.

Balaam

Variants: Ballaam, Ballam, Balham, Baalham, Ballan, Ballin

- Current frequencies: GB 644, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 393
- Main GB location 1881: Suffolk

1 English: locative name from Baylham (Suffolk), which is recorded as Beleham in 1086, Beilham in 1191, and Beylham in 1228. The form of the surname has been assimilated by folk etymology to the Biblical personal name Balaam (Numbers 23–4).

Early bearers: Edmundus Belom, 1379 in Poll Tax (Kenninghall, Norfolk); Martha Balam, 1582 in IGI (Isleham, Cambs); John Beylham, 1500 in PROB 11 (Stratford, Suffolk); John Balam, 1568 in Subsidy Rolls (Suffolk); Thomas Balaam, 1603 in IGI (Walkern, Herts); Robt. ## Balch

Variants: Baulch, Belch, Boalch

- Current frequencies: GB 495, Ireland 7
- GB frequency 1881: 376
- Main GB location 1881: Somerset and Wilts

English: (i) nickname from an unrecorded Middle English **balche* or **belche*, presumed descendants of Old English bælce 'belch, belching; stomach; pride, arrogance'. (ii) nickname possibly from Middle English **balche*, a noun or adjective derived from Old English bælcan 'to shout', for a man who habitually shouted.

Further information: Reaney suggests that the word in (i) may have had the same meaning as Old English balca 'balk, beam, bank, ridge' and was used to denote someone who lived by a bank or ridge; or in the case of le Balch, le Belch was possibly used in the sense 'beam', metaphorically for a stout or heavily built man. There is no warrant for these speculations.

Early bearers: England: William Belch, 1185 in Templars Records (Oxon); William le Belch, 1295 in Parliament Rolls (Essex); Robert Balch, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Somerset); John Balche, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Chute, Wilts); Roberto Balch', 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Thornford, Dorset); Richard le Balch, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Sussex); John Belch, 1343 in Patent Rolls (Tring, Herts); Simon Belch', 1379 in Poll Tax (Salisbury, Wilts); Walter Belch, 1563 in IGI (Southill, Beds); Gulielmi Balch, 1572 in IGI (High Ham, Somerset); William Belch, 1581 in IGI (East Malling, Kent); Henricus Balch, 1587 in IGI (Chardstock, Devon); Henrici Balch, 1602 in IGI (North Wootton, Dorset); John Belch, 1615 in IGI (Pirton, Herts); John Baulch, 1707, John Balch, 1730, John Bolch, 1738 in IGI (Brewham, Somerset); Joseph Boalch, 1782 in IGI (Colyton, Devon).

Scotland: Jonett Belch, 1658 in IGI (Dunblane, Perth).

- Current frequencies: GB 778, Ireland 1
- GB frequency 1881: 456
- Main GB location 1881: Sussex; also Kent and Surrey

English: locative name from Balcombe in Sussex.

Further information: There is a similarly named place in Frittenden (Kent) but there is no medieval evidence that it produced a surname. Derivation from Balkholme (ER Yorks), illustrated by Johannes Balkholm', 1381 in Poll Tax (Wheldrake, ER Yorks), is also theoretically possible but there is no evidence that it has survived as a hereditary surname.

Early bearers: John de Balecomb, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Sussex); Edmundus Balcumbe, 1379 in Poll Tax (Balcombe, Sussex); Ricardus Balcombe, 1379 in Poll Tax (Ardingly, Sussex); Thomas Balcombe, 1525 in Subsidy Rolls (Sussex); Thomas Balcombe, 1559 in IGI (Balcombe, Sussex); John Baucam, 1570 in IGI (Buxted, Sussex); Thoma Balcombe, 1586 in IGI (Shipbourne, Kent); Thomas Baulcombe, 1589 in IGI (Glynde, Sussex); Margaret Balkam, 1589 in IGI (Steyning, Sussex); William Bawcom, 1591 in Archaeologia Cantiana 48 (Kent); William Baucomb, 1598 in IGI (Faversham, Kent); Thomas Baucom, 1607 in IGI (East Grinstead, Sussex); John Baulcomb, 1615 in IGI (Cuckfield, Sussex); Ann Bauckham, 1666 in Poll Tax (Teston, Kent); Ann Balkham, 1698 in IGI (Herstmonceux, Sussex).

Balcon

Balkham

- Current frequencies: GB 14, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 43

- Main GB location 1881: Middx; Staffs
- 1 English, Norman: locative name perhaps from Balham in Streatham (Surrey). This suits the location of the following early bearers. However, Balham appears in the 13th and 14th centuries spelled Belg-, Balg-, and Ballweham, but not Balaam or Balham. These latter spellings suggest that the bearers may have been descendants of the Norman family of de Ba(a)llon, who were benefactors of Bermondsey Priory (Surrey); see Balaam (2). Early bearers: Walterus Balaam, 1258–9, Walterus Balam, 1263 in Assize Rolls (Guildford, Surrey); Johannes Balham, 1381 in Poll Tax (Witley, Surrey); John Balham, 1388–9 in Feet of Fines (Surrey); Margarete Balham, 1498 in PROB 11 (London). References: Place-Names of Surrey, pp. 33–4.
- 2 English: see Balaam (1).

Balhatchet

- Current frequencies: GB 39, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 23
- Main GB location 1881: E Cornwall and SW Devon; also Worcs

Cornish: nickname from Medieval French baillie hachet 'give axe', perhaps for a woodman, or, some have claimed, an executioner. Compare Bailhache, with the Middle English hache 'axe, hatchet' instead of the diminutive hachet.

Early bearers: Jone Balhatchet, 1545 in IGI (Poughill, Cornwall); Richardi Balhatchett, 1573 in IGI (Buckland Monachorum, Devon); John or Mathew Ballhatchett, 1708 in IGI (Widcombe in the Moor, Devon); Grace Balehatchet, 1718 in IGI (Stratton, Cornwall); Jno Balhatchett, 1779 in IGI (Stratton, Cornwall).

Balkin

Variants: Balcon

- Current frequencies: GB 45, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 36
- Main GB location 1881: W Midlands

1 Norman, English: relationship name perhaps from an unrecorded Middle English personal name **Baldekin*, **Baudekin*, an Anglo-Norman borrowing of Middle Dutch Baudequin, a Flemish pet form of the personal name Baldwin. Compare Bodkin. However, a clear link between Middle English Baudekin (attested in Northumb), and post-medieval Balkin (found in the W Midlands) has not been established, and the modern name may have a different source, a variant of Balcombe perhaps, by migration.

Early bearers: John Baudekyn, 1365 in Patent Rolls (Chillingham, Northumb); Johan Baudkyn, 1377 in Poll Tax (Glanton, Northumb); Johannes Balkin, 1572 in IGI (Stone, Staffs); Raph Balkin, 1602 in IGI (Waverton, Cheshire); Thomas Balkin, 1796 in IGI (Hartshorne, Derbys).

2 Jewish (Ashkenazic): relationship name from the Yiddish female personal name Beyle, meaning 'beautiful' (related to French belle). Compare Balcon.

Early bearers: Ada Balkan, born in Russia, in Census 1891 (Prestwich, Lancs); Lazarus Balkin, tailor, born in Russia, in Census 1891 (Manchester, Lancs); Joseph Balkin, macintosh maker, born in Russia, in Census 1901 (Prestwich, Lancs); Hyman Balkan, in Census 1901 (Bethnal Green, Middx); Samel Balkin, clicker, boot trade, born in Russia, in Census 1911 (Whitechapel, Middx); Goodman and Sarah Balkin, born in Vilna, Russia, in Census 1911 (Whitechapel, Middx); Aaron Balkin, colliery labourer, born in Russia, in Census 1911 (Neath, Glamorgan).

Balkwill

Variants: Barkell, Barkwill, Barkwell

- Current frequencies: GB 351, Ireland 2
- GB frequency 1881: 262
- Main GB location 1881: Devon

English: apparently a variant of Bakewell, from the place-name Bakewell (Derbys), which appears as Baukwell, Bawkwell, and the like throughout the Middle Ages. The distribution suggests a south-western origin, with regional -will for more general -well 'stream', but no suitable place has been found; it may be irregular for one of the places called Blackwell or Blakewell in Devon, but on the face of it the first element is either Old English balca 'ridge, bank' or bealluc 'testicle'. There is a Balkwell Farm in North Shields (Northumb) which can hardly be relevant.

Early bearers: Danielis Bawkwell, 1562 in IGI (Enfield, Middx); Georgius Balkwell, 1615 in IGI (Ashburton, Devon); Cordwell Balckwell, 1627 in IGI (Harrow on the Hill, Middx); Willielmi Balkwill, 1622 in IGI (Buckfastleigh, Devon); Richard Balkwell, 1650 in IGI (Crediton, Devon); Grace Barkwell, 1663 in IGI (Highampton, Devon); James Barkwill, 1679 in IGI (Dunchideock, Devon); Arthur Bawkwell, 1691 in IGI (Black Torrington, Devon); Mergeary Balkwill, 1715 in IGI (Sheepwash, Devon); Anne Barkell, 1753 in IGI

Ball

Variants: Balle, Balls, Le Ball

- Current frequencies: GB 35134, Ireland 674
  - GB frequency 1881: 24483
  - Main GB location 1881: widespread: esp. Lancs, Staffs; London
  - Main Irish location 1847–64: Dublin and Meath
- 1 English: (i) nickname from Middle English bal, ball(e) 'ball, sphere, globe, round body' (Old French balle or Old English **beall(a)*). (ii) nickname possibly from a Middle English adjective **ball* in the sense 'bald', from ball 'a white streak, a bald place', balle being the weak form. (iii) relationship name from Balle, an Old Scandinavian personal name found in place-names in England, which may have survived as Middle English Balla, found in 1250 in Book of Fees (Hants). The Scandinavian name may be for ballr 'dangerous' in an older sense of 'brave'.

Early bearers: Godwin Balle, 1137 in Ekwall, ELPN (London); Norman Balle, 1183 in Pipe Rolls (Northants); G. le Bal, 1249 in Selborne Charters (Sussex); Robro le Bal, 1296, Matill' le Bal, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Steyning, Sussex); Robert le Bal, 1301–2 in Winchester Pipe Roll (Hants); Thoma Bal, 1379 in Poll Tax (Eaton Socon, Beds); Henrico Balle, 1379 in Poll Tax (Osgathorpe, Leics); Alano Ball', 1379 in Poll Tax (Liverpool, Lancs); Margaret Ball, 1540 in IGI (Ellastone, Staffs); John Ball, 1547 in IGI (Saint Mary Magdalen Old Fish Street, London); Ketheryn Baul, 1565 in IGI (Edenham, Lincs); Robert Bal, 1615 in IGI (Kirkham, Lancs).

Early bearers: Alfwyn' attebal, 1166 in Pipe Rolls (Norfolk); Henricus atte Balle, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Somerset); Thomas atte Ball', 1379 in Poll Tax (Staverton, Northants); Richard atte Balle, 1386 in Löfvenberg (Worcs); Katherine Ball, 1539 in IGI (Higham, Suffolk); Lawrence Ball, 1539 in IGI (Upton cum Chalvey, Bucks); John Ball, 1540 in IGI (Fulbourn, Cambs); Steven Ball, 1540 in IGI (Lezant, Cornwall).

  - GB frequency 1881: 2265
  - Main GB location 1881: widespread in Scotland: esp. Roxburghs and Selkirks, also Lanarks and Midlothian; and N England: esp. Northumb
- Scottish: locative name probably from the lands of Bellenden, now Bellendean, on Ale Water west of Robertson (Roxburghs). John Ballantyne, archdeacon of Moray 1533–8, was also recorded as John Ballentyne or Bellenden. It has been suggested that the place-name is from Gaelic baile an deadhain 'the dean's farm', which leaves open the possibility of more than one geographical origin; the surname is persistently associated with Falkirk and Edinburgh as well as Roxburghs. The origin of the variation between -d- and -t-, if genuine, is unknown.

Early bearers: Scotland: Robert Bellentyne, abbot of Holyrood, 1484–1500 in Scots Peerage 1; Johne Bellendene, 1575, Hendrie Belenden, 1640 in IGI (Edinburgh, Midlothian); James Bellenden, 1596, Agnes Bellendyne, 1615, Robert Ballanden, 1637 in IGI (Falkirk, Stirlings); Robert Ballendene, 1600 in IGI (Kelso, Roxburghs); Agnes Balladene, 1611 in IGI (Leith, Midlothian); Johne Ballantine, 1632, Williame Ballandene, 1649 in IGI (Peebles, Peebles); Margaret Balantine, 1653, William Ballintine, 1682 in IGI (Lanark, Lanarks); John Ballantein, 1694, James Bellantyn, 1699 in IGI (Yarrow, Selkirks).

Variants: Bandey, Bendy, Bundy

- Current frequencies: GB 462, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 303
- Main GB location 1881: Bucks and Beds

English: (i) nickname perhaps from an unrecorded Middle English **bandi*, **bondi*, **bendi*, derivatives of Middle English and Old English band, bond, bend 'band, ribbon, stripe' + Middle English -i, reinforced by Old French bendé 'striped', with reference perhaps to clothing ornamented with ribbons or stripes, or to the diagonal band of a heraldic device. Compare Band. (ii) nickname perhaps from an unrecorded Middle English word **bandy*, **bendy* 'curved stick', used for someone with bent or crooked legs. Compare Gambrill. The word bandy is first recorded about 1630 in OED in the context of a hockey-like game called bandy-ball played with bent sticks, so the surname evidence (if this is the same word) is considerably earlier.

Baney

- Current frequencies: GB 27, Ireland 0

- GB frequency 1881: 28
  - Main GB location 1881: Norfolk; Essex
- English: possibly a nickname from a Middle English adjective with the suffix -i derived from what has become dialectal bane 'lithe, nimble; clever' (from Scandinavian beinn 'straight'). The base-word is found in E Anglia and NW England. Compare Scots and formerly W English steepy for steep.
- Further information: Reaney's derivation from an unrecorded (northern) Middle English **bani* 'bony' is untenable, given the distribution of the surname.
- Early bearers: John Bani, William Bani, 1279 in Hundred Rolls (Bucks); Anne Banie, 1564 in IGI (Kirkham, Lancs); John Baney, 1661 in IGI (Norwich, Norfolk); Henry Bany, 1725 in IGI (Little Dunham, Norfolk).

- GB frequency 1881: 357

- Main GB location 1881: W Scotland; esp. Bute
- Main Irish location 1847–64: Clare

Scottish: locative name from a place called Bennachtain, according to Black, whose site and etymology are uncertain. The second element appears to be a Gaelic genitive case form of the Pictish personal name Nechtan.

Further information: This has been incorrectly claimed to be a variant of Ballantyne. It has also been claimed that the original form, Bannatyne, was that of a sept associated with Clan Campbell and Clan Stuart of Bute. There has been some confusion of the two names over part of their distributions in later centuries, as witnessed by the John Bannatyne who is also called Ballentyne and Bellenden in the 1660s (Black) and the brothers mentioned in Patronymica Britannica, p. 17, who indifferently called themselves Bannatyne and Ballantyne.

Early bearers: William de Benathyne, 1242–50 in Midlothian Charters; Nicolas de Benothyne, 1278–94 in Midlothian Charters . . . Banaghtyn, 1304 in Black; Johannes de Banauthyn, dominus de Currok, about 1354 in Kelso Register (Roxburghs); Sir Richard of Bannochnite of the Corhouse, about 1460, sometimes signing himself Bannachty, in Black; Richard Banauchtyn de Corhouse, 1467 in Newbattle Register (Corehouse, Lanarks); Agnes Bannatyne, 1600 in IGI (Edinburgh, Midlothian); Thomas Johnne Bannatyn, 1612 in IGI (Tranent, E Lothian); Jonat Bannatyn, 1668 in IGI (Ayr, Ayr); Donald Bannatyn, 1691 in IGI (Rothesay, Bute); David Bannatyne, 1671 in IGI (Glasgow, Lanarks); James Bannatine, 1672 in IGI (Yester, E Lothian); Finual Bannatyn, 1744 in IGI (Rothesay, Bute); Mary Bannatine, 1794 in IGI (Kilmory, Bute).

- Norman, English: nickname from Old French banaste, banastre 'covering for a cart or wagon; basket', i. e. a large wicker container. In the 12th century a Norman family of this name had estates in Orne (Normandy) and in England. Ricardus Banastre appears in charters relating to the earls of Chester in about 1120–9. In the mid-12th century Turstan or Turstin Banastre was father-in-law to Richard fitz Roger of Woodplumpton, Lancs, which may explain the later appearance of the surname in Lancs. With what sense the Norman surname was acquired is unknown. It can hardly have been occupational, contrary to Reaney's view that it denoted a basket maker. It is possible that many or even all of the later bearers of the surname were descended from this knightly family. Willelmus Banastre, 1381 in Poll Tax (Sulhamstead Bannister, Berks) was probably a descendant of William Banastre, who held one of the manors at Sulhamstead in 1198. However, several men with this surname in the Poll Tax Returns are described as servants or agricultural labourers, while Ricardus Banastr', 1381 in Poll Tax (Gnosall, Staffs) was a butcher. It is conceivable that these men took their name from Middle English banastre, a borrowing of the French word, and that it referred to a basket or hamper they used in their work. Alternatively they may have belonged to branches of the knightly family that had fallen in the social scale.

Early bearers: Turstan Banastre, 1149–53 in Stenton, Feudalism (Lincs); Richard Banastre, 1186 in Eynsham Cartulary (Oxon); John Banastre, 1258 in Inquisitiones post Mortem (Leeds, WR Yorks); John Banastre, 1296 in Patent Rolls (Berwick upon Tweed, Northumb); Roberto Banastr', 1379 in Poll Tax (Walton le Dale, Lancs); Roberto Banastr', 1379 in Poll Tax (Congerstone, Leics); Adam Banaster, 1379 in Poll Tax (Brierley, WR Yorks); Richard Banester, 1459 in Ancient Deeds vi (Staffs); John Banyster, 1554 in York Freeman's Register (York); Jacobi Bannister, 1542 in IGI (Alstonefield, Staffs); Henrici Banester, 1560, Henric. - Current frequencies: GB 275, Ireland 1
- Main GB location 1881: Essex and Cambs; E Lothian

1 Norman, English: (i) relationship name from the Old French personal name Bard(e), Continental Germanic Bardo, from **bard-* '(battle)axe', borne as a surname by a prominent Norman family with lands in west Normandy and in various English and Scottish counties, including Essex, Herts, NR Yorks, Northumberland, and Lanarks. In Scotland the original family were Norman landowners in Strathaven parish (Lanarks). They were descended from the Baards, lords of Loftus in the North Riding of Yorkshire, descendants of the mid-12th-century Richard Baart. The preposition in some of the medieval examples is an anomalous addition to convey high social status. (ii) some post-medieval examples may be variants of Beard.

Early bearers: England: Ralph Bard, about 1155 in Danelaw Documents (Lincs); Hugh Bard', 1219 in Pipe Rolls (Yorks); John Barde, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Somerset); Johannes Bard, 1377 in Poll Tax (Hartington, Northumb); Katerina Bard, 1379 in Poll Tax (Crimsham, Sussex); Henricus Barde, 1379 in Poll Tax (Goldsborough, WR Yorks); James Bard, 1539 in IGI (Grimsby, Lincs); Thomas Bard, 1564 in IGI (Sutton, Beds); Willm Bard, 1564 in IGI (Topcroft, Norfolk); Barnard Bard, 1571 in IGI (East Hirstead, Sussex); Reynald Bard, 1576 in IGI (Little Hadham, Herts).

References: Place-Names of NR Yorks, p. 150; Place-Names of Lincs 2, pp. 8–10; 4, pp. 54–5.

2 English: relationship name from the personal name Barnaby, the vernacular English form of the Biblical name Barnabas which also had some currency: Bernabas Pegon', 1434 in Feet of Fines (Beds). This name is apparently from Aramaic bar na ya 'son of the prophet', but the Greek text of Acts 4:36 explains the name as hyios paraklēseōs 'son of consolation' or 'encouragement'. Some of the following examples may belong with (1).

Early bearers: Roger Barnabe, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Cambs); Walter Barnabe, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Lyndhurst, Hants); Roger Barnaby, 1331 in Feet of Fines (Cambs); Juliana Barnabe, 1367 in Feet of Fines (Northants); Thomas Barnaby, 1379 in Poll Tax (Daventry, Northants); John Barnebe, 1436 in Feet of Fines (Hants); Anne Barnebye, 1563 in IGI (Mere, Wilts); Gyllian Barnaby, 1564 in IGI (Saint Giles Cripplegate, London); Robert Barnaby, 1565 in IGI (Aylesbury, Bucks); Edward Barnaby, 1602 in IGI (Limpsfield, Surrey); Phillip Barnaby, 1607 in IGI (Harrow on the Hill, Middx); Oliver Barnbie, 1611 in IGI (Tenterden, Kent); Rebecca Barnaby, 1618 in IGI (Andover, Hants); Richard Barnabye, 1653 in IGI (Boughton under Blean, Kent).

3 English: variant of Parnaby by assimilation to the much more familiar personal name, place-name, or locative surname.

- GB frequency 1881: 361
  - Main GB location 1881: Warwicks and Leics
  - Main Irish location 1847–64: Galway; also Mayo
- 1 English: (i) nickname perhaps from Middle English bernacle, barnakyll, a diminutive of Middle English bernak, Old French bernac ‘powerful bit or twitch’, used to restrain a restive horse or ass, also as an instrument of torture. The nickname might have been applied to an expert in taming horses, a torturer, or possibly a man with a savage, unrestrained temper who was considered in need of such restraint. (ii) nickname perhaps from the barnacle goose, Middle English bernacle, a species of wild goose (compare Wildgoose).

Further information: It is unlikely to be a locative name from Barnacle (Warwicks), which is Bernhangre in Domesday Book, as this place-name did not reach its modern form before 1547.

Early bearers: Richard Bernikel, 1344 in Close Rolls (Kent); Richard Barnakyll, 1514 in Oxford University Register; John Barnacle, 1545 in Bardsley; Thos. Barnacle, 1574 in IGI (Southam, Warwicks); Christopher. Burnicle, 1625 in IGI (Kirkleatham, NR Yorks).

2 Irish: adopted for Ó Cadhain, by translation of cadhan ‘barnacle goose’. Compare Coyne 2.

Further information: This probably originated as an 18th- or 19th-century translation of the Irish name. Early bearers: surnames, Ireland: Michael Barnacle, 1796 in Flaxgrowers Ireland (Annagh, Mayo); Patrick Barnacle, 1869 in IGI (Mayo, Ireland).

1 English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Bern, Barn. In the Midlands and East Anglia this is based on the Scandinavian personal name Biörn, anglicized as Beorn; in the south-west it is from Old English Beorn; both names are from a word meaning ‘warrior’. Some of the following surname bearers may alternatively belong with other senses below.

Early bearers: given names: Bearn, 1071, Barn, 1072 in Anglo-Saxon Chronicle (Devon); Beornus, 1086 in Domesday Book (Suffolk); Bern, 1086 in Domesday Book (Dorset).

surnames: Tomas filius Bern’, 1177 in Pipe Rolls (Staffs); Pirne Beorn, about 1050 in Yorks Charters; William Bern, 1190 in Pipe Rolls (Worcs); Simon Bern, 1202 in Norman, English, Irish: nickname probably for a quarrelsome person, from Old French barat, Middle English bar(r)at, bar(r)et(te) ‘trouble, distress’, later ‘deception, fraud; contention, strife’. Through Norman settlement it also became common in Ireland, where it was gaelicized as Baróid (Munster) and Baréid (Connacht).

Further information: Evidence is lacking for a derivation from the Continental Germanic personal name Beroald, Old French Beraud, which has been suggested. The Old Scandinavian personal name Bárðr is found in the spellings Bared and Baret in Yorks and Lincs in Domesday Book, but there is no proof of its continued use.

Early bearers: England: Matthew Baret, about 1150–5 in Danelaw Documents (Lincs); Robert Barate, 1165 in Pipe Rolls (Notts); Jordan Barat, 1185 in Templars Records (Herts); Seman Barette, 1207 in Pipe Rolls (Hants); William Barrette (Barat), 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Essex); Adam Baret, 1377 in Poll Tax (Blackaton, Devon); Walterus Baret, 1377 in Poll Tax (Eltham, Kent); Simon Baret, 1379 in Poll Tax (Heacham, Norfolk); Johannes Baret, 1379 in Poll Tax (Sutton, WR Yorks); Johannes Baret, 1381 in Poll Tax (Twynning, Gloucs); Johannes Barrett’, 1381 in Poll Tax (Lathom, Lancs); John Barrat, 1541 in IGI (Chappel, Essex); Alice Barret, 1542 in IGI (West Bradenham, Norfolk); Isabell Barrit, 1542 in IGI (Willoughby, Lincs); Johis. Barret, 1547 in IGI (Halifax, WR Yorks); Anne Barrett, 1548 in IGI (Kingsclere, Hants); Thomas Barret, 1551 in IGI (Charlton Kings, Gloucs); John Barrett, 1553 in IGI (Barnstaple, Devon); James Barratt, 1598 in IGI (Henbury, Gloucs); Margaret Barratt, 1602 in IGI (Lichfield, Staffs); Henry Barrot, 1608 in IGI (Chesterfield, Derbys); Jacobi Barrott, 1619 in IGI (Medbourne, Leics); Thomasine Baret, 1631 in IGI (Bingley, WR Yorks).

Ireland: Edmund Barret, 1566 in Fiants Elizabeth §915 (Richardston, Carlow); Beany Barret, 1574 in Fiants Elizabeth §2510 (Limerick); Rob Barrett, 1585 in Fiants Elizabeth §4731 (Kyllalo); Richard McJames Barott, husbandman, 1585 in Fiants Elizabeth §4781 (Cork).

1 Scottish: (i) nickname, status name from Scots baron, which in the Highlands denoted a small proprietary landholder. In Angus it alluded specifically to a tenant of one of the small baronies attached to the Abbey of Coupar Angus, as in the case of Robert Barrone, tenant of Glenlylay (Glenisla), 1508 in Cupar-Angus Rental Book. The surname was taken by Scottish migrants to Ulster. Compare Baron. (ii) relationship name, reduced form of McBarron.

Early bearers: Patrick Baroun, 1428 in Arbroath Register (Edinburgh, Midlothian); James Barroun, 1555 in Protocol Books Glasgow (Edinburgh, Midlothian); William Barrowne, 1658, in IGI (Dundee, Angus); John Barron, 1688, in IGI (Old Machar, Aberdeens); Margaret Barron, 1755 in IGI (Kirkmichael, Banffs); John Baron, 1795 in IGI (Old Machar, Aberdeens); John Barron, 1862 in IGI (Dundee, Angus).

2 Irish: from Mac an Bharáin, see McBarron. Early bearers: John Barron fitz Richard, horseman, 1567 in Fiants Elizabeth §1032 (Cosinestowne, Wexford); Thomas Barron fitz Edmund, gent., 1571 in Fiants Elizabeth §1934; Milo Barron, 1572 in Fiants Elizabeth §2032 (Bournechurch); Richard Baron alias fitz Gerald, 1578 in Fiants Elizabeth §3431 (Kilkenny).

Early bearers: Deirmot O Barran, 1603 in Fiants Elizabeth §6761; Phelim crome O Barran, 1603 in Fiants Elizabeth §6761.

4 English: see Baron. However, the frequency of this form in Northumb and Durham is due in part to immigration by Scots bearing the surname explained in (1).

1 Norman, English, Welsh, Irish: locative name perhaps from a French hamlet named with Old French barri 'rampart', later applied to a settlement below the rampart of a town; see (5). However, although there are plenty of hamlets so named in southern France, it has not been possible to identify one in or near Normandy, and this origin of the Norman surname is therefore uncertain. The Norman family itself believed that their surname alluded to Barry Island off the Glamorgan coast, opposite the town of Barry. It seems an insignificant place for the naming of such a powerful family, but that is the story told by Gerald de Barry (alias Giraldus Cambrensis) in his Itinerarium Cambriae (1191). Born at Manorbier Castle (Pembrokes) in about 1146, he was a grandson of William de Barri and Nest, daughter of the Welsh prince Rhys ap Tewdwr, and a great-grandson of Odo, lord of Manorbier, to whom Barry, along with much other land in S Wales, had been granted by William the Conqueror. In Ireland the surname mostly goes back to another member of this family, Philip de Barry, who took part in the invasion of Ireland in 1169.

Further information: Gerald de Barry states that Barry Island took its name from a Saint Baroc, whose remains were buried there, but it is clearly named from the adjacent town, which is thought to derive its name from the river (Old Welsh **barren* 'hill brook?') that flows into Barry harbour. See DPN Wales.

Early bearers: England and Wales: Willelmus de Barri, 1131 in Pipe Rolls (Pembrokes); Nest de Barri, 1185 in Pipe Rolls (Sussex); Richard Barri, 1195 in Feet of Fines (Suffolk); John Barry, 1550 in IGI (Rye, Sussex); Nicolas Barry, 1561 in IGI (Shipbourne, Kent); Beniamyn Barry, 1564 in IGI (Saint Dunstan in the East, London); Robart Barry, 1567 in IGI (Bodmin, Cornwall); John Barrey, 1573 in IGI (Hastings, Sussex); William Barry, 1575 in IGI (Barnstaple, Devon); Mary Barry, 1702, Mary Bary, 1706 in IGI (Shelton, Beds).

Ireland: James Barry, viscount of Barrymore, 1561, in Fiants Elizabeth §351; Thomas Barrie, lord Barrie Oge, 1564 in Fiants Elizabeth §666 (Munster); James Barry, knight, viscount of Buttivaunt and Lord Barrymore, 1573 in Fiants Elizabeth §2253 (Munster).

References: Giraldus Cambrensis, The Itinerary through Wales and The Description of Wales, ed. Ernest Rhys, Everyman's Library (London, 1908), p. 60; Domesday Descendants, p. 305.

2 Norman, English: nickname from Old French barriet, barret, barré 'striped' (Old Norman French **barri*, Latin barratus), probably in reference to striped clothing or to a piece of striped cloth worn around the helmet for identification in battle. The term barry came to be used in heraldry for a field horizontally divided by strips of alternating colour. The seal of Galfridus Barry, lord of Teversal (Notts), on a charter dated 1244, was 'barry of eight or ten with a file of ten labels' (Thoroton, Notts). Another family named Barry were lords of Tollerton (Notts), though it is unclear if they were related to the Teversal family. In modern Notts, Barry may have been confused with Berry.

Early bearers: Radulfus Barret, 1130, Radulfus Barre (of Teversal) 1204, Galfridus Barret, 1176–7, identical with Galfridus Barre, 1177 in Pipe Rolls (Notts); Robertus Barry, lord of Tollerton, 1242–3 in Book of Fees (Notts); Ric[ard]us Barry of Tollerton, 1288 in Assize Rolls (Notts); Thomas Barre, lord of Teversal, 1316 in Feudal Aids (Notts); John Barry of Teversal, 1450 in Subsidy Rolls (Notts); Ed[mund]o Barry of Tollerton, 1450 in Subsidy Rolls (Notts); Lettuse Barrie, 1639, William Barry, 1695, Joseph Barry, 1748 in IGI (Calverton, Notts); William Barry, 1821 in IGI (Ruddington, Notts).

3 Irish, Manx: in Ireland, when this is not the Norman name in (1), it may be an anglicized form of Ó Báire 'descendant of Báire', a short form of either of two Gaelic personal names, Bairrfhionn or Fionnbharr, both meaning 'fair-topped'. This may also be the source of the Manx name Barry, whose family's main seat was Ballavarry in Kirk Andreas (Kneen).

Early bearers: Ireland: James McShane Movyle Barry, gent., 1573 in Fiants Elizabeth §2247 (Dongorony, Cork); John Moyle McDavid McRobert Barry, gent., 1573 in Fiants Elizabeth §2247 (Castellehan, Cork); Conogher M'loghlen I Barrie, 1591 in Fiants Elizabeth §5562.

10M: [...] Barry, 1643, [...] Barrey, 1663 in (Kneen).

4 Scottish: locative name see Barrie.

5 Huguenot, French: locative name; French Barry, from a French place so named; see (1) and compare Dubarry. Huguenots brought this name to England and Ireland in the 17th century.

Early bearers: Isaac Barry, 1693 in IGI (Threadneedle Street French Huguenot Church, London).

Bastard

- GB frequency 1881: 421
  - Main GB location 1881: Devon and Cornwall
- Norman, English: nickname from Middle English, Old French bastard ‘child born out of wedlock’.
- Further information: Bastard is the name of a Devon family recorded at Kitley near Yealmpton since the late 17th century. The sharp decline in numbers of bearers of this surname since the 19th century is no doubt due at least in part to people changing their name because of the negative connotations of the vocabulary word. However, illegitimacy was not always regarded as a stigma; the Conqueror himself is described as ‘William the Bastard’ in state documents.

Early bearers: Robert Bastard, 1086 in Domesday Book (Devon); William le Bastard, 1201 in Assize Rolls (Somerset); Johannes Bastard, 1381 in Poll Tax (Canterbury, Kent); Henry Bastard’, 1411 in Feet of Fines (Aveton Gifford, Devon); Robert Bastard’, 1417 in Feet of Fines (Modbury, Devon).

Bastiman

- Current frequencies: GB 121, Ireland 0
  - GB frequency 1881: 26
  - Main GB location 1881: NR Yorks and ER Yorks
- English: of uncertain origin.

Early bearers: John Bastyman, fisherman, 1528 in York Registry Wills (Hilderthorpe, ER Yorks); Robert Bastyman or Bastiman, and Nicholas Bastiman, 1568–9 in Yorks Deeds (Sewerby, ER Yorks); Isabel Bastyman, widow, 1577 in York Registry Wills (Flamborough, ER Yorks); Annas Bastiman, 1602 in IGI (Filey, ER Yorks); Bartle Basteman, 1628 in IGI (Barton upon Humber, Lincs); Robt. Bastiman, 1669 in IGI (Flamborough, ER Yorks); Sarah Basterman, 1793 in IGI (Barmston, ER Yorks).

1 English, Norman: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Bate. It could represent an unrecorded Old English name **Bata* (compare Battock), or a side-form of Batte, a short form of Anglo-Norman French names beginning in Bart-, such as Bartelmew (Bartholomew) or Bartram (Bertram). See Batt and compare the pet form Bateman, which also occurs as Batman and Battman. Some of the following early bearers may belong under (2).

Further information: The Old English personal name is possibly evidenced in the place-name Batcombe in Dorset (see Place-Names of Dorset 4, p. 186). It may be identical with the byname of a Winchester monk, Ælfricus qui Bata cognominabatur, about 1051 in Tengvik. Tengvik derives it from Old English batt 'cudgel' (see Batt), and suggests it may have been used as a nickname for someone of a stout appearance.

urnames, SW England: Thomas Bate, 1327 in Subsidy Rolls (Willesley, Gloucs); Walter Bate, 1332 in Subsidy Rolls (Woolston, Devon); Johannes Bate, 1381 in Poll Tax (Willesley, Gloucs); John Bate, 1554 in IGI (Lezant, Cornwall); Fraunces Bate, 1578 in IGI (Cirencester, Gloucs); John Bate, 1606 in IGI (Fremington, Devon).

Further information: Reaney doubtfully suggests that the locative name denoted someone who lived by a 'fat pasture'. This would be an unrecorded sense of Old Scandinavian bati 'profit, gain'.

Bater

Variants: Beater, Better

- Current frequencies: GB 707, Ireland 0
- GB frequency 1881: 311
- Main GB location 1881: Devon

English: occupational name, nickname from Middle English beter, betour 'beater, flogger, boxer' (Old French bateor 'one who beats', Old English bēatere 'beater, boxer'), either for a fighter (compare Champion) or, more probably, for someone who grinds spices or beats cloth or metal, such as a coppersmith, or for a dealer in baterie, i. e. beaten copper or brassware (London Court Rolls). It may also be a short form of the common occupational names Coperbeter, Flaxbeter, Goldbeter, Ledbeter, Wodebeter, Wolbeter.

Further information: Stephen le Coperbeter, 1286, was identical with Stephen le Batur (1292 in London Letter Books A).

- Main Irish location 1847–64: Donegal

1 English: relationship name from the Middle English personal name Bat(te), probably a pet form of Middle English Bartelmew (Bartholomew) or perhaps the rarer Bartram (Bertram). Compare Bett and Bate, with which Bat(te) may often have been interchangeable; and compare the pet form Bateman, also found as Batman and Battman.

2 English: (i) nickname probably in many cases a variant of Back 'bat' (the winged animal). The alteration of Middle English bakke to bat is not on record before 1580 in OED but the frequency with which le Bat occurs in medieval documents suggests that this is a likely source of the name. (ii) nickname alternatively from Middle English bat(te) (Old English batt) 'cudgel, club, bat', perhaps for someone of stout appearance or for one who wielded a bat. Compare Bate (1) and Ælfricus qui Bata cognominabatur, about 1051 in Tengvik. Examples below without the definite article may belong under (2) or (3).

Early bearers: William, Robert, and Peter Bat, 1170–87 in Ekwall, ELPN (London); Herbert Bat, 1182 in Pipe Rolls (Shrops); Reginald le Bat, 1275 in Hundred Rolls (Yorks); Richard le Bat, 1296, John Bat, 1327 in German, Jewish (Ashkenazic): status name, nickname from German Bauer 'farmer', Middle High German (ge)būr, Middle Low German būr, denoting the inhabitant of a būr, a small dwelling or building. This word later fell together with Middle High German būwære, an agent noun from Old High German būan 'to cultivate', eventually also (at first in Low German dialects) 'to build'. The German surname thus can mean 'farmer' or 'builder'. It also came to mean 'neighbour, fellow citizen', and was used as a term of address, especially in country districts.

Further information: This surname is also found elsewhere in central and eastern Europe.

Early bearers: German: Leopold and Adolphus Bauer, born in London, in Census 1851 (Marylebone, Middx); Frederich Aug. Bauer, pianist, born in Hamburg, in Census 1861 (Saint Pancras, Middx); Rudolph Bauer, born in Austria, in Census 1871 (Liverpool, Lancs); Johannes Bauer, born in Germany, in Census 1881 (Liverpool, Lancs); Christian Bauer, born in Coblenz, Germany, in Census 1881 (Wanstead, Essex); Karl Bauer, born in Grunsburg, Germany, in Census 1881 (West Ham, Essex); Maria Baur, born in Germany, in Census 1881 (London); Gunda Bauer, born in Germany, in Census 1901 (Lancs).

Jewish: Gottlieb Maurice and Cecilia Yelda Bauer, born in Hamburg, Germany, in Census 1881 (Middx); Lazarus and Rachel Bauer, born in Poland, in Census 1911 (Lancs); Louis and Leah Bauer, born in Russia, Census 1911 (London).
