CULTURAL INSIGHT

Coffee Shops and Milk Tea in Hong Kong

---

The large population of expats in Hong Kong has created a taste for good coffee. Now, one third of Hong Kong's residents buy ready-to-drink coffee outside the home, according to a 2006 survey. You can find an array of quality and value-priced coffee throughout the territory, especially on the island. Along with coffee, many of these cafes sell gourmet sandwiches, salads, pastas, and baked goods. In Hong Kong, Starbucks coffee is popular along with Pacific coffee.

Aside from coffee, "milk tea," known as dai pai dong, stands as a traditional alternative to quench that Cantonese sweet tooth. It consists of black tea sweetened with evaporated milk and is usually part of an afternoon meal in Hong Kong tea culture. The key feature of Hong Kong-style milk tea is that a sackcloth bag is used to filter the tea leaves. However, any other strainer may be used to filter the tea.
