Grammar Points

The Focus of this Lesson is Another Grammar Point that is Also Good to Have

仲有幾耐？

"How long is the line-up?"

Our grammar point in this lesson picks up where our last one left off. In our last lesson we learned how to use 仲有 (zung6 jau5) to mean "still to have" as in sentences like 我有車，我仲有樓 ngo5 jau5 ce1, ngo5 zung6 jau5 lau2 "I have a car, and also have a house"). In this lesson we are expanding on the usage of this verb phrase, which can also mean "still to have," indicating that time has passed but the condition has not changed. For examples, consider the following:

1. 仲有幾耐？
Zung6 jau5 gei2 noi6?
"How long is still left until we finish"
2. 仲有幾遠？
Zung6 jau5 gei2 jyun5
"How far is it still until we get there"
3. 仲有咩食？

Zung6 jau5 me1 sik6?

"What's left to eat?"

To answer all of these questions, simply say 仲有 and then add the distance, or time, or the amount of food or money remaining, as follows:

1. 仲有十分鐘。

Zung6 jau5 sap6 fan1 zung1

"There is still ten minutes left."

2. 仲有兩百蚊。

Zung6 jau5 loeng5 baak3 man1

"There is still two hundred dollars."

A Final Tip

Did you know that 仲有 (zung6 jau5) can also be used to start a sentence? For instance, if you're giving a speech and have already made a few points, a good way to continue is by saying 仲有, 我要講下 (zung6 jau5, ngo5 jiu3 gong2 haa5) which means "In addition, I'd like to talk about...."
