Grammar Points

The Tricks of How Many and How Much

而家幾點呀？

"What time is it?"

Our grammar focus this lesson is learning how to ask questions using the character 幾 gei2 ("how many/how much"). This question word is typically followed by nouns or adjectives. For example, we can ask 幾點 gei2 dim2 ("what time is it"), 幾歲 gei2 sui3 ("how old are you"). In those sentences 點 refers the number of hours in the current day while 歲 refers to years of age. In the sentence 你幾高 nei5 gei2 gou1 ("how tall are you"), 高 is an adjective meaning "tall."

1. 而家幾點啊？

Ji4 gaa1 gei2 dim2 aa3?

"What time is it now?"

As mentioned above, the question 幾點 (gei2 dim2) literally means how many hours. In conversational Cantonese it is common to add the word 而家 ji4 gaa1 ("now") at the end of the sentence, making the full question 幾點啊而家 ("what time is it now")? Here are a few more examples:

1. 你個細路幾歲？

Nei5 go3 sai3 lou6 gei2 sui3?

"How old is your child?"

2. 生日快樂！你幾歲啊？

Saang1 jit6 faai3 lok6! Nei5 gei2 sui3 aa3?

"Happy birthday! How old are you?"

Bonus Point:

In addition to adjectives and nouns, 幾 (gei2) can also be followed by measure words in order to ask how many things there are or how much of something you would like. For instance 幾個人 gei2 go3 jan4 means "how many people", 幾杯 gei2 bui1 asks "how many glasses" and 幾杯酒 gei2 bui1 zau2 asks "how many glasses of wine."

Telling Time in Hong Kong

Telling the time in Hong Kong is easy: you're always running late. If you need to handle talking about it though, the rule is to say the hour plus 點 (dim2), followed by the number of minutes past the hour. For instance, if it's 10:15 you can say 十點三 (sap6 dim2 saam1), while at 6:45 you can say 六點九 (luk6 dim2 gau2). As with the United States, Hong Kong follows a twelve hour cycle in which the time repeats itself in both the morning and afternoon.
