Traditional Chinese

部手提電腦好靚喔！
多謝，我尋日買嘅。
又薄又輕。
係呀...係最新嘅型號。
但係個螢幕細咗啲。
冇嘢係完美咖嘛。

English

What a beautiful laptop!
Thanks, I just bought it yesterday.
It's so thin, and so light.
Yeah...it's the latest model.
But the screen is a bit small.
Well...nothing is perfect.

useful sentence patterns that you should be starting to hear and use. The first is a mild way to complain using adjectives. In our dialogue, we heard this in the line 但係個螢幕細咗啲 ("but the screen is a bit small"). Simply put, by adding 咗啲 after an adjective, we stress that the adjective applies "excessively" to its object in a critical way. For other examples, consider:

1. 呢部手提電腦大咗啲。
"This laptop is a bit too large."
2. 呢部手提電腦輕咗啲。
"This laptop is a bit too light."

The second sentence pattern we want to highlight offers an easy way to chain together ideas using the adverb 又 ("also"). You can use this to make lists, as in the following sample sentences:

1. 我部手提電腦又薄又輕。
"My laptop is thin and light."
2. 呢部手提電腦又厚又重。
"This laptop is large and thick."

There is no limit to the number of adjectives you can chain together using this pattern. So if you're shopping for a laptop or cellphone or other piece of expensive electronics, be sure to let the salesperson know the exact qualities you want using the 又... 又... pattern.

Get Your Electronics!

Low import tariffs in Hong Kong make the city a great place to purchase imported electronics. And while Hong Kong isn't well known for producing many of the more well-known electronics brands, there is a small domestic electronics industry on the island. Some of the larger companies in this space include VTech and Techtronic. While these might not be household names, they're important producers of consumer electronics ranging from electric rice cookers to LCD screens and are major employers in Hong Kong, as well as anchors linking the Hong Kong tech scene to the more production oriented areas in Shenzhen, Guangdong and other parts of southern China.
