GRAMMAR

When entering a restaurant in Hong Kong, someone will most likely ask you "How many people?" (幾多位? - gei2 do1 wai2) The first part of this sentence is made up of the word for "how many," which in Cantonese is 幾多 (gei2 do1). The measure word for "people" is 位 (wai2) and literally means "seat."

You can simply respond to this question by replacing 幾多 with a number followed by the measure word for "people" (位).

The numbers 1-5 in Cantonese are:

Number	Cantonese	Jyutping
1	一	jat1
2	二	ji6
3	三	saam1

4	四	sei3
5	五	ng5

CULTURAL INSIGHT

Quick Tip

---

Table manners are rather relaxed in Hong Kong, although there are a few rules you may want to follow. If you are unsure, you can watch what others do and emulate their behavior.

Wait to be told where to sit since there is often a seating plan. Wait for the others to start eating before you begin eating. Food is served on a "Lazy Susan," or revolving tray. Also, it is considered a compliment to burp, so let loose.
