

Exploring Adjectives

Hello and welcome back, in this lesson we will take a closer look at adjectives and learn how to use determining or descriptive adjectives.

What is an adjective?

Let's recap what makes a word an adjective.

An adjective is a word that defines, qualifies or modifies the meaning of a noun. It expresses a quality or attribute of the word it qualifies. There are two main categories of adjectives.

Determining adjectives:

Also called limiting adjectives, determining adjectives are words that are generally classed in the family of determiners, and are dealt with elsewhere:

There are a limited number of these words.

They are notably possessive adjectives (such as my, their),

1ST SINGULAR	MY
2ND SINGULAR	YOUR
3RD SINGULAR (MALE)	HIS
3RD SINGULAR (FEMALE)	HER
3RD SINGULAR (THING)	ITS
1ST PLURAL	OUR
2ND PLURAL	YOUR
3RD PLURAL	THEIR

Numerals and quantifiers (such as one, two, three, every, many),

Quantifiers

count

some enough
a lot of a few several many

---

not + any
enough
a lot of many

non-count

enough
a lot of a little
a great deal of much

---

not + any
enough
a lot of much

Demonstrative adjectives (such as this or that),

Interrogative adjectives (such as which)

Descriptive adjectives:

Descriptive adjectives (such as big, English, wonderful) describe the permanent or perceived qualities of a noun; their number is unlimited.

There are two categories of descriptive adjectives:

Qualifying adjectives, such as big, nice, complicated which express the passing or perceived qualities of a noun.

Differences:

Qualifying adjectives are "gradable", i.e. it is possible to graduate their intensity, by the addition of an adverb of degree, such as very, quite, enough; most qualifying adjectives can also be put into comparative or superlative forms (big, bigger, biggest).

Classifying adjectives cannot be graded: a person is either married or not, or dead or not; he or she cannot be "very married", nor "more dead" than another person, at least not under normal usage of the words.

Exceptions to the rule:

Many adjectives can be used either as qualifying adjectives, or as classifying adjectives, depending on the context. Take the example of the adjective old.

Examples:

1. My car is very old (qualifying, with a noun)

2. He is intelligent (qualifying, with a pronoun)

3. The old computer was much quieter than the new model (classifying)

In the first example above, old is a perceived quality, and therefore gradable, in the second old has an absolute value, with the meaning of former or previous.

Classifying adjectives (including absolute adjectives) such as married, second, hydraulic, unique, dead which express permanent qualities or absolutes.

Classifying adjectives are adjectives used to classify a noun as certain type.

Classifying adjectives place people
and things into classes or groups.
They are non-gradable.

It was a military vehicle.

He plays a musical instrument.
